

TRANSNATIONAL EUROPE: PROMISE, PARADOX, LIMITS

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES ON PRESENTERS

Jessica Allina-Pisano is Associate Professor in the School of Political Studies at the University of Ottawa. She received her PhD in Political Science from Yale University in 2003. Her research focuses on the politics of property rights, economic restructuring, natural resource privatization, and identity politics in post-Soviet states. Allina-Pisano is the author of The Post-Soviet Potemkin Village: Politics and Property Rights in the Black Earth, published by Cambridge University Press in 2007. Her research on Russian and Ukrainian politics, political economy, and the uses of ethnography in political science has been published in journals such as World Politics, International Labor and Working Class History, The Journal of Peasant Studies, the Russian journal Otechestvennye zapiski, the German journal Geographische Rundschau, as well as chapters in edited volumes. She is currently working on two book manuscripts: an analysis of the development of facade political and market institutions in post-Soviet states, and a monograph on the political economy of surveillance in a Hungarian village currently divided by the Ukraine-European Union border.

James Casteel is Co-ordinator of the Zelikovitz Centre for Jewish Studies at Carleton University and teaches in the Department of History and at the Institute of European, Russian, and Eurasian Studies at Carleton. He completed a Ph.D. in modern European history at Rutgers University in 2005 and also holds an interdisciplinary M.A in the Social Sciences from the University of Chicago. He is currently working on a book manuscript based on his dissertation, entitled Between Empire and Utopia: Russia in the German National Imaginary, 1881-1956. His most recent publication is 'The Russian Germans in the Interwar German National Imaginary,' Central European History, 40:3 (2007), 429-466.

Joan DeBardeleben is Chancellor's Professor at Carleton University in the Institute of European, Russian, and Eurasian Studies. She is also Director of the Centre for European Studies and of the cross-Canada Strategic Knowledge Cluster 'Canada-Europe Transatlantic Dialogue'. Her research focuses on Russian domestic politics, democratic governance and elections in Russia, and EU-Russian relations. Recent publications include: The Boundaries of EU Enlargement: Finding a Place for Neighbour (editor and co-author) (Palgrave, 2008); 'Russia's Duma Elections and the Practice of Russian Democracy,' The International Journal 63:2 (2008); Democratic Dilemmas of Multilevel Governance: Legitimacy, Representation and Accountability in the European Union (co-editor and contributor, with Achim Hurrelmann) (Palgrave, 2007), and 'Russia in Transition', in European Politics in Transition (6th edition, Houghton Mifflin, 2008).

Franck Düvell, is a Senior Researcher at the Centre for Migration, Policy and Society (COMPAS), University of Oxford. From 2003-4, he was Jean Monnet Fellow at Robert-Schuman Centre for Advanced Studies, European University Institute (Florence), and from 1998-2003 he was Research Fellow at the University of Exeter. He has been a lecturer in sociology, political science and in geography at the University of Bremen, Germany. His research focus is on clandestine migration, mixed migration, European and international migration politics and on the ethics of migration control. His present projects concentrate on transit migration in Ukraine and Turkey and on quantitative methods in clandestine migration research. Amongst his publications is Illegal Immigration in Europe (Palgrave, 2006), Migration: Boundaries of Equality and Justice (with Bill Jordan) (Polity, 2003), Die Globalisierung des Migrationsregimes (Assoziation A, 2003), and Irregular Migration: Dilemmas of Transnational Mobility (with Bill Jordan) (Edward Elgar, 2002).

Grzegorz Gorzelak is Professor of Economics, specialising in regional and local development and policies. He is Director of the Centre for European Regional and Local Studies (EUROREG) at Warsaw University, as well as President of the Polish Section of the Regional Studies Association. Professor Gorzelak has conducted research on multivariate statistical comparisons, regional and local development of Poland and Central Europe, and post-socialist transition. He was advisor of the Polish government during the local government reform in 1990, manager of PHARE program for local government (1991), and consultant to several local and regional authorities on development strategies in Poland and in Ukraine. He is a member of several advisory councils of the Polish government, and of two committees of the Polish Academy of Sciences. Has coordinated several Polish and international (also EU-financed) research programs on regional development, regional policy, post-socialist transition and evaluation of the EU Cohesion Policy. He has published (as author and editor) over 30 books (several of them in English) and over 200 articles. He is Editor-in Chief of the journal Studia Regionalne i Lokalne.

Robert Gould is Adjunct Research Professor in the School of Linguistics and Applied Language Studies, and also in the Institute of European and Russian Studies of Carleton University. For a number of years he has been following (party-) political discourses in the areas of immigration and national identity. Recent papers at conferences and colloquia include: 'The European Paradox: Swiss Discourses of Identity between Dependence and Xenophobia' (University of Southampton, 2004); 'The CDU's Identity and Immigration Discourses and the Future of the European Union' (University of Bath, 2004); 'Das Gericht, die Entscheidung, die Politiker: Sprachanalytische Überlegungen zu Identitätsbekundungen im Kopftuchstreit' (University of Bielefeld, 2005), 'Immigrants and the Nation: Political Discourses in Germany and Spain, 2002-2004' (with Antonia Maria Ruiz Jimenéz) (University of Victoria, 2006).

Achim Hurrelmann is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Carleton University. His books include Democratic Dilemmas of Multilevel Governance (ed. with Joan DeBardeleben) (Palgrave, 2007), Legitimacy in an Age of Global Politics (ed. with Steffen Schneider and Jens Steffek) (Palgrave, 2007), Transforming the Golden-Age Nation State (ed. with Stephan Leibfried, Kerstin Martens and Peter Mayer) (Palgrave, 2007), and Verfassung und Integration in Europe (Campus, 2005). His articles have appeared in journals such as Comparative European Politics, European Law Journal, Politische Vierteljahresschrift, and Aus Politik und Zeitgeschichte.

Karim H. Karim is Director of Carleton University's School of Journalism and Communication. He was a Visiting Scholar at Harvard in 2005, and has been a distinguished lecturer at several other universities. Karim holds degrees from Columbia and McGill universities. He was awarded the inaugural Robinson Prize for excellence in communication studies in 2001 for his book Islamic Peril: Media and Global Violence (Black Rose, 2003). He edited the The Media of Diaspora (Routledge, 2003), and has also published on issues of the socio-cultural contexts of communications technology, new media policies, cultural pluralism, citizenship, and social development in Muslim societies.

Kemal Kirisci is a Professor at the Department of Political Science and International Relations at Boğaziçi University, Istanbul and is currently Visiting Professor at the Department of Political Science, Carleton University. He holds a Jean Monnet Chair in European Integration and was also the director of the Center for European Studies at Boğaziçi University between 2002 and June 2008. His areas of research interest include European integration, asylum, border management and immigration issues in the European Union, EU-Turkish relations, Turkish foreign policy, Middle Eastern politics, ethnic conflicts, and refugee movements. His recent books include Turkish Immigrants in the European Union: Determinants of Immigration and Integration (ed. with R. Erzan) (Routledge, 2007), Turkey In World Politics: An Emerging Multi-Regional Power (ed. with B. Rubin) (Lynne Rienner, 2001); and The Political Economy of Cooperation in the Middle East (with A. Çarkoğlu, and M. Eder) (Routledge, 1998). Kirisci has also published numerous articles and chapters on identity issues, Turkish foreign policy, EU-Turkish relations, and migration in academic journals and edited books.

Nathan Lillie is Assistant Professor of international business and management at the University of Groningen in the Netherlands. He received his PhD in Industrial Relations from Cornell in 2003, and was a Fellow at the Helsinki Collegium for Advanced Studies from 2004-2007. His research interests include trade union revitalization, global governance of industrial relations, European Union industrial relations regulation, international collective bargaining, and the transnationalization of labour markets. His book, A Global Union for Global Workers: Collective Bargaining and Regulatory Politics in Maritime Shipping, analyzes the International Transport Workers' Federation's Flag of Convenience Campaign. His articles on that topic and on corporate social responsibility, migration and trade union strategy have appeared in the British Journal of Industrial Relations, Environment and Planning-A, Politics and Society and other journals. His current research is on the transnationalization of industrial relations in construction in Finland, Germany and the United Kingdom.

George Petrakos is Professor of Spatial Economics at the Department of Planning and Regional Development, University of Thessaly, Greece. He is also the Director of the South and East European Development Center (SEED). His research interests include urban and regional economics, development, transition economics, Balkan studies and international economic relations. He has published several books with international publishers such as Springer, Routledge and Ashgate and a large number of articles in international journals, including the International Journal of Public Policy, European Planning Studies, Regional Studies, and Eastern European Economics. He has participated in many European and national projects related to various aspects of development, growth, cooperation and spatial cohesion. He has served as an expert in national and EU committees and has been an invited speaker in several leading European Universities.

Daniel V. Preece teaches political science at the University of Alberta and Grant MacEwan College. His current research and teaching interests include comparative political economy, social policy and the welfare state, class and transnational class formation, and the influence of social partners and other civil society organizations in shaping the policy process in the EU. He completed his Ph.D. in 2008 from the University of Alberta and his dissertation was titled The Political Economy of Harmonisation: Ideological Contestation over Social Policy in the European Union.

Chris Rumford is Reader in Political Sociology and Global Politics at Royal Holloway, University of London, where he is also co-director of the Centre for Global and Transnational Politics. His research interests include European transformations in the context of globalization, cosmopolitanism, and borders and bordering. His books include Cosmopolitan Spaces: Europe, Globalization, Theory (Routledge, 2008), Rethinking Europe (with Gerard Delanty) (Routledge, 2005), The European Union: a Political Sociology (Blackwell, 2002), and the forthcoming edited collections Handbook of European Studies (Sage) and Citizens and Borderwork in Contemporary Europe (Routledge).

Karolina Szmagalska-Follis is a social-cultural anthropologist; she gained her Ph.D. from the New School for Social Research (2007) and is currently working at the University of Pennsylvania. Dr. Szmagalska-Follis is interested in comparative border studies and the politics of European Union's expansion. She is currently working on a book manuscript on the transformation of Poland's border with Ukraine into an external boundary of the European Union. Her ongoing work explores how the new paradigm in EU border and immigration policy is related to the entire political project of constructing an integrated European Community. Approaching this issue ethnographically from the perspective of a marginal Eastern European location allows her to draw attention to some of the contradictions of EU integration which have a profound effect on lives lived near and across borders. Most recently, she is the author of 'Repossession: Notes on Restoration and Redemption in Ukraine's Western Borderland,' an article published in the May 2008 issue of Cultural Anthropology which engages with one Ukrainian community's response to the social and economic shifts in the borderland since 1989.

Phil Triadafilopoulos is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Toronto. He earned his PhD in Political Science at the New School for Social Research and is a former Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council Postdoctoral Fellow. His research focuses on how immigration and citizenship policies shape boundaries of national belonging in liberal democratic states. He is presently completing a book entitled Becoming Multicultural: Immigration and the Politics of Citizenship in Canada and Germany. His next project, in collaboration with Anna Korteweg, compares the politics of immigrant integration policies in Canada, Germany and the Netherlands. The project is funded by a grant from the University of Toronto's Joint Initiative on German and European Studies.