

When: Tuesday, October 13, 2015, 12:00PM - 2:00PM
Where: FSS Room 4006, University of Ottawa Campus

The EU has arrived at a critical juncture. Currently, there are two main areas of concern. First, the lingering effects of the Eurozone sovereign debt crisis: Problems in Greece have not yet been solved; worrisome debt levels and high unemployment are still manifest in some countries; and Greece, Spain, Italy, Portugal, France, and Italy face unpopular austerity measures. Second, the refugee influx: Hundreds of thousands of refugees are amassing on Europe's borders, requiring a quick response from the Union. The various policy options are highly controversial. Additionally, there are problems with the rightwing government in Hungary, the continuing conflict in Ukraine, and a possible "Brexit". How the EU responds to these challenges will have an important bearing on the future of Europe.

Dr. Wolfgang Muno is a professor at the Department of Political Science at the Johannes Gutenberg University Mainz. His research interests pertain to comparative politics in Latin America as well as development and international relations theory.
