

Towards a New European Neighbourhood Policy: What are the Benefits of the DCFTAs for Shared Security and Prosperity?

with Tatjana Muravska

When: Tuesday, March 8, 2016, 2:30PM - 4:00PM

Where: Multimedia Room 482, MacOdrum Library

This lecture examines the problem of the European Neighbourhood countries' integration with the European Union market from two perspectives: the macroeconomic situation as an integral component of the overall transformation process, and the political economy of the regional integration perspectives of these countries. This methodological approach serves as a tool for integrating a number of main goals related to the EU's soft power that require the development and support of civil society in the neighbouring states.

Dr. Muravska will offer insight into the implementation of the regional arrangements taking into consideration the new political and economic realities in the Eurasian Single Economic Space, and examine the implications of expanding and adapting the content and approach of the Association Agreements and the Deep and Comprehensive Free Trade Area. Economic development in Eastern Europe and Caucasus as a precondition for the prosperity and security is further discussed.

Dr. Tatjana Muravska is Professor of Regional and European Integration Studies at the University of Latvia. Since 2000, she has been Director of the Centre for European and Transition Studies, European Studies Masters Programme, Doctoral School for European Integration and Baltic Sea Region Studies, academic coordinator of the Jean Monnet Centre of Excellence and Jean Monnet Chair ad personam at the UL, and former President of the Latvian European Community Studies Association. She is currently a short-term visiting scholar with the Centre for European Studies at Carleton University.
