

Rita Cerutti is a senior official with Canada's department of Environment and Climate Change, as well as the Co-chair of the Climate and Clean Air Coalition. She has over 24 years of experience covering a realm of environment issues including chemicals, climate change, clean air, ozone depletion, and short lived climate pollutants. She has led Canada's engagement in regional environmental cooperation mechanisms, many of Canada's bilateral environmental partnerships, as well as Canada's involvement in key international environment fora and initiatives. In addition to various positions with the Government of Canada, Rita has also previously worked in the Government of the Northwest Territories, non-government organizations, and has also taught economics. She holds both a Master of Arts in Economics and a Master of Environmental Studies, where she focused on economy-environment integration, environmental policy, and sustainable development.
