COURSE DESCRIPTION

This course surveys historical changes in the definition of crime and the administration of criminal law. While the adversarial criminal trial is associated with the medieval origins of the common law, the basic elements of our current system of criminal justice reflect much more recent transformations in law enforcement, the criminal trial, and punishment. These transformations, associated with the rise of the modern state, attempted to manage the effects of industrialization, urbanization, and colonization. The course focuses on these developments in 18th and 19th century England, and on the adoption and modification of the English criminal law and institutions in late 18th and 19th century Canada. Selected issues in criminal law history are also explored, including the uses of criminal law to deal with real and perceived state security threats, the experiences of native peoples and women.
