COURSE DESCRIPTION

There can be little doubt that the relationship between the Canadian criminal justice system and First Nations peoples is, and long has been, fraught with conflict, tension and for many, an absence of the justice the system claims to embody. It is the goal of this course to deconstruct that relationship and attempt to come to grips with the range of factors which have fed into this fractious relationship and, most importantly, the over-representation of Aboriginal people within Canadian criminal courts and correctional system. Here, analysis will focus upon institutional efforts to ameliorate over-representation as well as the rise of traditional and restorative justice initiatives which exist primarily as amendments to, or outside of, the dominant system. Among those initiatives studied will be sentencing circles, family group/community conferencing, and healing circles.

REQUIRED TEXTS

There are two required textbooks for this course,. In addition to these texts, students will be expected to read 1-2 of the suggested additional readings listed for each week of class, and should be prepared to discuss both required and suggested readings.

E.J. Dickson-Gilmore and Carol LaPrairie, Will the Circle be Unbroken: Aboriginal Communities, Restorative Justice and the Challenges of Conflict and Change (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2005).

Andrew Woolford, The Politics of Restorative Justice: A Critical Introduction (Winnipeg: Fernwood Publishing, 2009).

EVALUATION(All components must be completed in order to get a passing grade)

Participation: 35%	Students will be expected to take an active and informed role in class discussions and analysis; no marks will be granted for attendance, as this is a prerequisite to participation.
Term Paper: 40%	Students will be expected to prepare and submit a paper of no less than 20 double-spaced pages, exclusive of references and appendices. As a general rule, late papers are not accepted; students who are able to justify late submission through formally documented excuse may be permitted to hand in the paper, but may also face penalties. Papers are due at 11:35 a.m. , December 5, 2010, and must be handed to the instructor in class; late papers will not be accepted without clear, official documentation supporting an alteration of the course requirements.
Presentation: 25%	Students will present their papers to the class in a presentation of approximately 20 minutes; presentations will begin in the third or fourth week of classes, depending upon enrolment.
