

Research demonstrates academic writers are more productive and enjoy their writing more when they make writing 'social'.¹

Centre for Research and Education on Women and Work (CREWW) and
MacOdrum Library's Archives and Research Collections (ARC) invite you to participate in the

CREWW-ARC Writing Commons

Make a commitment to your writing and enhance your writing productivity. Join other researchers from all disciplines, men and women, for distraction-free writing time. Surround yourself with others engaged in the writing process. Enjoy time every Friday afternoon to write and, if necessary, access Carleton's Archives and Research Collections. No registration is required. Bring along your writing project, laptop, and colleagues who need a quiet place to write.

CREWW-ARC Writing Commons is an inviting space for up to 15 writers.

When: Friday afternoons
2:00 to 4:00 p.m.
Beginning September 19, 2014

Where: the ARC Classroom
5th floor extension
MacOdrum Library, Carleton University

For more information, please contact:

Merridee Bujaki, Director, CREWW Merridee.bujaki@carleton.ca

Lloyd Keane, Archives and Research Collections Lloyd.keane@carleton.ca

Belcher, W.L. 2009. Writing your Journal Article in 12 Weeks: A Guide to Academic Publishing Success, SAGE: Thousand Oaks, California; Grant, B.M. 2006. Writing in the company of other women: exceeding the boundaries, Studies in Higher Education, 31(4), 483-495.