CARLETON COURSE TAUGHT ABROAD
GINS 3300 (0.5 CREDITS), GLOBAL AND INTERNATIONAL STUDIES ABROAD
TOPIC FOR SUMMER 2018: THE MAKING & UNMAKING OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

This three-week Carleton course taught in the Hague, The Netherlands, and Ottawa, Canada, explores the international justice terrain by examining the actors, institutions, contexts and controversies engaged in the making of international law. The course explores the histories and contestations of politics and law-making in the contemporary period. The goal is to offer students an opportunity to travel to the heart of modern international legal institutionalism to learn about, and critically reflect on, the processes through which international criminal law is being structured. We will examine the key components of justice – “victims”, “perpetrators”, members of civil society, the designers and architects of new judicial spaces, the technology programmers and the financiers and donors. The course is organized according to: (1) the context for violence in the sites of international court engagement, (2) the genealogies and innovations of contemporary international criminal law, (3) the brokers of the international criminal law regime, and (4) the controversies and contestations of international law making.
