Competition for Natural Resources: The New Geopolitical Great Game?

The Transatlantic Academy brings together scholars, policy experts, and authors from both sides of the Atlantic and from different disciplinary perspectives each year to research and analyze a distinct policy theme of transatlantic interest. This year's report, A Global Nexus: Why the Competition for Resources has Become More Dangerous, examines the growing global challenges arising from the links between different resources – land, water, food, energy, and minerals – and the poor governance of this resource nexus. The report argues that the transatlantic community should actively address these challenges by putting its own house in order and providing global leadership.

MIT POLITICAL SCIENCE

Societies in all regions of the world face unprecedented challenges. Globalization and economic uncertainty, immigration, asymmetric security threats, energy dependence and the environment, health care, poverty, and polarization of electorates are among the issues testing our understanding of how human communities function.

In the MIT Department of Political Science, we see in these challenges the opportunity to conduct innovative, high-impact research. We believe that the strongest theoretical models emerge through observations in the field. From voting booths in the U.S. to the villages of Afghanistan to the factory floors of China, our goal is to advance the dialogue of political science by comparing empirical phenomena with scholarly insights into how societies work. In the process, we are developing alternative uses for existing methodologies and inventing new ones.

MIT Political Science is proud to sponsor the Council for European Studies

CALL FOR PAPERS

Twentieth International Conference of Europeanists
Amsterdam, The Netherlands • June 25-27, 2013
Organized by the Council for European Studies (CES)

Crisis and Contingency: States of (In)stability

The current economic crisis of debt, the euro, and unemployment takes place in a framework of highly dynamic creative and destructive processes occurring at various levels: globalization, heightened nationalisms, continued migration, shifting cultures, rising inequality, concerns over security, climate change, sustainable development, etc.

All of these transform definitions of Europe: of its geographical boundaries; of what institutions are needed to structure and resolve issues of policy and democracy; and of how Europe can and might interact with other parts of the world, from North America to revolutionary North Africa to the new powerhouses in Asia and Latin America. The intellectual challenge of grappling with these changes in our world provides the foundations for an exciting meeting, held in one of the founding capitals of a global Europe.

The Council for European Studies (CES) invites proposals for panels, roundtables, book discussions, and individual papers on the study of Europe broadly defined. We encourage proposals in the widest range of disciplines and particularly welcome panels that combine disciplines, nationalities, and generations. Participants are permitted to present in a maximum of two sessions.

We strongly encourage participants to submit their proposals as part of an organized panel. Full panel proposals will be given top priority in the selection process by the Program Committee. Participants may find it useful to connect with like-minded scholars through the growing number of CES research networks, linked on the "Research" page of the CES website.

Proposals may be submitted from August 15 to October 8, 2012. Participants will be notified of the Committee's decisions by December 10, 2012. Information on how to submit will be posted on the CES website and disseminated through its newsletter during the summer of 2012. To subscribe to the CES newsletter visit: <http://www.councilforeuropeanstudies.com>

WELCOME MESSAGE

Dear CES Community,

We begin this year with continued worries over the financial future of Europe, and continuing debates about membership and boundaries, movement and rights. What it means to be European invokes questions about what it means to affiliate in multiple ways: to a religion, to a region, to a state, and to a continent. Our theme for this year's conference is precisely these issues of diversities and differences, along political, spatial, cultural, religious, and so many other lines.

Across our panels and roundtables, we explore how regions are posing new challenges to nation-state hegemony, how diversity was governed under past empires, and how decentralization and evolution affect cultural, political, and financial worlds. The past and present streams of immigration lead to debates over integration and minority rights, treatments of diversity in courts and the military, and involvement of new minorities in political coalition-building. As well as highlighting CES's long-standing strengths in studies of politics and society, we attend to diversities in education and language. We also find greater attention to local and regional levels of policy-making and enforcement, as well as to sexual diversity and gender difference in European lives today.

We are now building a new pattern for CES itself, one that fully embraces our trans-Atlantic character. Meeting annually, and alternating between sites in Europe and North America, we are also building leadership structures and strengthening relationships that more clearly reflect our deep commitment to this broad mission.

Among the most important relationships that have been strengthened are those with the Council's patrons and partners. The Council has received funding from the following impressive and diverse list of institutions, and we would like to publicly recognize and thank them for their support:

- The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation
- Boston College, College and Graduate School of Arts and Sciences
- British Consulate-General Boston
- Brown University, Office of International Affairs
- Center for the Study of Europe at Boston University

- Consulate General of Spain in Boston
- Davis Center for Russian and Eurasian Studies at Harvard University
- The International Association for the Study of German Politics (IASGP)
- Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Department of Political Science
- The Minda de Gunzburg Center for European Studies
- Northeastern University, College of Social Sciences and Humanities
- Northeastern University, Office of the Provost
- Routledge, Taylor & Francis Group
- Royal Danish Consulate
- swissnex Boston, Consulate of Switzerland
- Transatlantic Academy (TAA)
- Tufts University, School of Arts and Sciences
- Brown University's Watson Institute for International Studies
- The Weatherhead Center for International Affairs at Harvard University

Without the contributions of these generous sponsors, the hard work of CES staff and volunteers, and, most importantly, the continuing interest of the exceptional CES community of scholars and researchers, it would not be possible for the Council to host this 19th International Conference of Europeanists. Thank you.

Warmest regards,

Transacting Transition 978 1 56549 222 6, $24.95

“This is a useful collection of studies that should be of interest to practitioners, policy-makers and funding agencies, as well as to analysts of post-conflict politics and to those with an interest in the politics of the former Yugoslavia.” — Journal of Southern Europe and the Balkans

In Transacting Transition, scholars and practitioners with first-hand knowledge of foreign assistance programs recount what happens when democracy goes local, and principles like transparency, gender equality, interethnic tolerance and cooperation run up against particular realities—political agendas, self-interest and memories of conflict.

Keith Brown is a sociocultural anthropologist specializing in the study of twentieth-century Macedonia. He received his doctorate from the University of Chicago and taught at Bowdoin College and the University of Wales before joining the Watson Institute at Brown University. His research into how different communities construct history in Macedonia, Greece, and Bulgaria led to his book The Past in Question: Modern Macedonia and the Uncertainties of Nation, as well as a number of articles on the culture, history, and politics of Macedonia. He is also the editor of Transacting Transition: The Micropolitics of Democracy Assistance in the Former Yugoslavia, which came out of ongoing research on the politics of US democracy promotion programs. His other projects focus on identity politics in diasporic communities, and how the US military thinks about culture.

Boston University College of Arts & Sciences
Departments of International Relations and Political Science

Make your French (or British, or German, or Italian...) connection with degrees in international relations and political science from Boston University.

Boston University is strongly committed to the study of Europe, as evidenced by the recent establishment of the Center for the Study of Europe at BU (www.bu.edu/european) and a new BA and minor in European Studies that draws on the resources of 13 CAS departments and on BU Study Abroad programs in England, France, Germany, Ireland, Italy, Spain, and Switzerland (www.bu.edu/abroad).

BU's MA program in international relations trains students for careers that involve dealing with the EU in government or the private sector. The PhD program in political science offers students the opportunity to develop as scholars by studying the EU under the supervision of faculty members with extensive publication credits in that area.

See if Boston University's graduate programs in international relations and comparative politics are right for you. Contact Michael Williams at 617-353-9349 or mawillia@bu.edu, or visit the Department of International Relations at www.bu.edu/ir and the Department of Political Science at www.bu.edu/polisci.

Boston University is an equal opportunity, affirmative action institution.

PRESIDENTIAL PLENARY

SOURCES AND MECHANISMS OF DISCRIMINATION IN EUROPE TODAY

Across contemporary Europe, forms of racial, ethnic and religious discrimination are the object of social concern and policy debates, as well as the stuff of political campaigns. Contributors to this plenary session look at questions of the sources and mechanisms of discrimination through a variety of lenses and on macro and micro levels.

What Divides—and Unites—Europeans?

In keeping with the conference theme of “A Europe of Diversities,” this plenary panel brings together leaders in the study of Europe from a variety of disciplines to discuss the key types of diversities they see as dividing and (in some cases) uniting Europeans.

Participants will discuss the role of class, race, migration status, gender, geography, historical landscapes, and institutions of the political economy in exacerbating rifts between or in forging bonds among Europeans. What are the most salient forms of diversity that affect Europe? How do those forms shape European politics, society, and contemporary history?

BEST FIRST ARTICLE PRIZE

CALL FOR NOMINATIONS

The Council for European Studies (CES) is calling for nominations for its inaugural European Studies First Article Prize Competition. This new prize honors the best early work of the next generation of European Studies scholars. Two prizes will be awarded in 2012: one to a scholar working in the Humanities and one to a scholar working in the Social Sciences.

A multi-disciplinary First Article Prize Committee appointed by the Council's Executive Committee will choose the winner. Each prize winner will receive $500 and be publicly recognized on the Council's website and in its publications.

Deadlines: The nomination period opens October 17, 2011 and closes April 2, 2012. Prize winners will be announced in May 2012.

SUCCESS INSIDE & OUTSIDE THE ACADEMY:

VITAL CAREER SKILLS NOT TAUGHT IN GRADUATE SCHOOL

Professionals with advanced research degrees have many career options. They can be diplomats, deans, research directors, non-profit professionals, and university professors...just to name a few. However, building a successful career in any of these fields requires more than a first-rate graduate education. It requires skills they just don't teach in graduate school.

In this fascinating discussion forum, five distinguished panelists will discuss some of the many vital career skills not taught in graduate school that contribute to a successful professional life. Whether you're interested in public service, diplomacy, teaching, research, leadership, or administration, this panel will have tips on how to succeed both inside and outside the academy.

FEATURING:

John Bowen, Washington University in St. Louis

Cynthia Buckley, University of Texas at Austin & the Social Science Research Council (SSRC)

Phil Budden, British Consulate-General Boston

Nicholas Siegel, Transatlantic Academy (TAA)

Siovahn Walker, Council for European Studies (CES)

20TH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE
OF EUROPEANISTS

AMSTERDAM, THE NETHERLANDS • JUNE 25-27, 2013

CRISIS & CONTINGENCY: STATES OF (IN)STABILITY

The current economic crisis of debt, the euro and unemployment takes place in a framework of highly dynamic creative and destructive processes occurring at various levels: globalization, heightened nationalisms, continued migration, shifting cultures, rising inequality, concerns over security, climate change, sustainable development, etc.

All of these transform definitions of Europe: of its geographical boundaries; of what institutions are needed to structure and resolve issues of policy and democracy; and of how Europe can and might interact with other parts of the world, from North America to revolutionary North Africa to the new powerhouses in Asia and Latin America. The intellectual challenge of grappling with these changes in our world provides the foundations for an exciting meeting, held in one of the founding capitals of a global Europe.
