

Developed by Jean Monnet Project Studying EU in Canadian High Schools

www.carleton.ca/ces/EULearning

Developed by Jean Monnet Project *Studying EU in Canadian High Schools*¹

www.carleton.ca/ces/EULearning

An activity of the Centre for European Studies, Carleton University

www.carleton.ca/ces

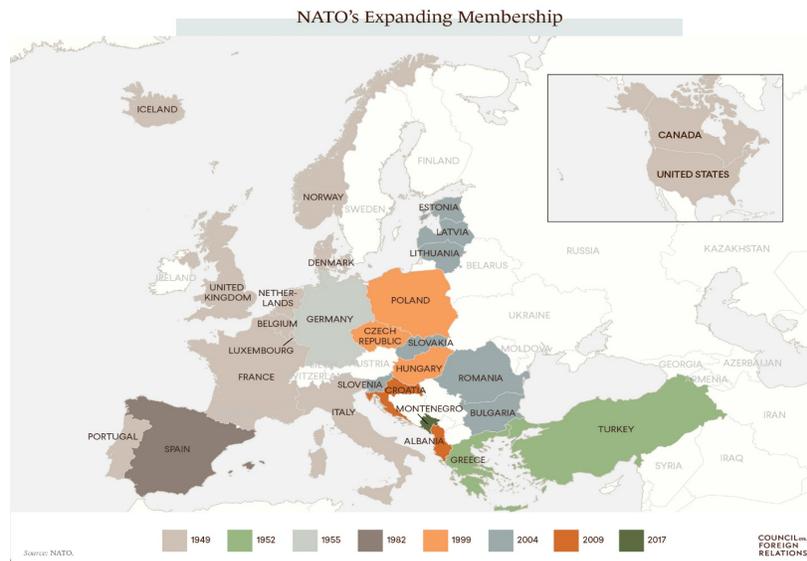

Use is free of charge. Source must be acknowledged if materials are distributed.

The Jean Monnet Project is supported in part by a grant from the Erasmus+ Programme of the European Union.

Canada, the European Union and NATO

Handout A: Historical Perspective – Canada, the EU, and NATO

Source: Council on Foreign Relations.

Note: Map shown as of 2017; North Macedonia joined NATO in 2020.

¹ This lesson plan was developed by research assistants of the Centre for European Studies, Demyan Plakhov and Paul Sjoberg, overseen by Professor Joan DeBardeleben. Development of this lesson plan was supported by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada and is co-funded by the Erasmus+ Programme of the European Union. Funding for this lesson plan does not constitute an endorsement of the contents of this publication, which reflects the views only of the authors and the European Commission cannot be held responsible for any use which may be made of the information contained therein.

Canada

The 20th Century saw Canada take part in both World Wars, sending thousands of soldiers to fight on European soil. In the First World War, the Dominion of Canada participated as a part of the British Empire, and in the Second World War, Canada participated as its own independent nation. These two conflicts are widely viewed as formative moments in Canadian history and for Canadian identity.

Canada took part in the League of Nations during the Interwar period, and immediately following World War II, Canada joined the United Nations in 1945. Four years later, in 1949, Canada became a founding member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), along with the United States and ten European countries.² This was Canada's first peacetime military alliance, placing the nation in a defensive security arrangement with the United States, Britain, and the nations of Western Europe. NATO was formed to “[deter] Soviet expansionism, [forbid] the revival of nationalist militarism in Europe through a strong North American presence on the continent, and [encourage] European political integration.”³ In the period after World War II, NATO reinforced the US’ Marshall Plan, an extensive program of economic aid to rebuild the war-torn countries of Europe, helping to assure that Western Europe would remain strong in the face of potential Soviet encroachment. During the Cold War, up until the collapse of the Soviet Union (also known as the USSR) in 1991, NATO forces provided a frontline deterrence against the Soviet Union and its satellite states which formed a Soviet-led military alliance called the Warsaw Pact in 1955. The European continent formed the central focus of NATO activities during the Cold War.

Source: Britannica.

² Founding members were Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Portugal, the United Kingdom, and the United States.

³ NATO website: https://www.nato.int/cps/en/natohq/declassified_139339.htm

With the collapse of the Soviet Union in 1991, the Cold War came to an end. The new Russian leadership seemed committed to a Westernizing path, involving democratic and economic reform. Several former satellite countries of Central and Eastern Europe that were once under Soviet influence aspired to EU membership, becoming closer to the West. Therefore, in the early 1990s, NATO's original mandate seemed outdated, as the dissolution of the Warsaw Pact and Russia's westward turn seemed to suggest NATO had lost its relevance.

Although the Soviet Union collapsed, NATO's two other original mandates still held: to deter the rise of militant nationalism and to provide the foundation of collective security that would encourage democratization and political integration in Europe. Moreover, NATO member states decided to reconfigure its purpose to include new tasks, such as peacekeeping and crisis-management. As the definition of 'Europe' expanded eastward following the fall of the Iron Curtain, so did NATO. After the 1990s, NATO positioned itself as the foundation for a larger, pan-European security architecture. More recently, the organization has asserted its members' strategic interests in the global campaign against Islamic terrorism and cyber-threats.

NATO has also seen a considerable expansion of membership since its founding, with the addition of Greece and Turkey in 1952, the Federal Republic of Germany (West Germany) in 1955, and Spain in 1982. After the collapse of the Soviet Union, several post-communist states joined (Czech Republic, Hungary, and Poland in 1999). In 2004, Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania became the only members once to be directly part of the Soviet Union. Currently NATO has thirty members following a continual process of enlargement to include all but six of the member states of the European Union, in addition to Albania, Iceland, Montenegro, North Macedonia, Norway, the United Kingdom, and Turkey.⁴ At the same time, Russia is not a member of NATO and has felt threatened by the expansion of NATO into its former sphere of influence.

NATO in the post-Cold War period

NATO's first test in the post-Cold War period was in the Yugoslav civil war, where NATO deployed a UN-mandated, multinational force of 60,000 soldiers to help implement the Dayton Peace Agreement and to create the conditions for a self-sustaining peace. In 2004, NATO handed over this role to the EU.

The events of September 11, 2001, led to NATO invoking its collective defence clause for the first time in its history. A coalition of countries – including many NATO allies – militarily intervened in Afghanistan in the fall of 2001.

As NATO continued to accept new members and build new partnerships, the NATO-Russia Council was established in 2002. The Russian Federation, chief successor to the fallen Soviet Union, seems to have (regardless of its intentions) also replaced the USSR as the chief external threat against which NATO continues to defensively position itself.

⁴ Austria, Cyprus, Finland, Ireland, Malta, and Sweden are not members.

Russia's illegal annexation of Crimea in 2014, Russia's aggressive actions against Ukraine, the Syrian conflict, and the rise of ISIL and terrorism have been a sobering reminder of the importance of NATO's core task: collective defence.

Canada's current involvement comes primarily in the form of providing armed forces to be stationed in Latvia, as part of NATO's 'Enhanced Forward Presence' in Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, and Poland. This measure is intended to provide reassurance and reinforce the visibility of NATO's commitment that "an attack on one Ally will be considered an attack on the whole Alliance".⁵

Sources and Videos for more information:

This is an introductory video on NATO by NATO (likely contain a NATO bias):

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=snXhtOpSXtl>

This is a video explaining how a country could join NATO by NATO (likely contain a NATO bias): <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=9A-QIYO5hZw>

This is CBC's take on Canada's role with NATO in Latvia (likely to contain a Canadian bias):

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=DUD1pFhxIuE>

Global News' take on "US vs. Canada on NATO spending" (likely to contain a Canadian bias):

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=spw2DgKy6ko>

Warsaw Pact explained by Britannica: <https://www.britannica.com/event/Warsaw-Pact>

For the overlap of membership between the European Union and NATO see the map at this link.

Note that the UK is no longer part of the EU, but still part of NATO.

<https://www.nato.int/docu/review/articles/2019/07/16/strengthening-eu-nato-relations/index.html>

⁵ See the NATO website, www.nato.int/cps/en/natohq/topics_136388.htm