COURSE DESCRIPTION/INSTRUCTOR'S STATEMENT

This course will offer a very brief introduction to the subfields of cognition. We will also discuss several topics of inquiry about cognition, such as memory, beliefs, and the interpretation of quantifiers. Most classes will consist of three parts: a lecture (where I will invite discussion and questions), short student presentations, and discussion of a paper.

This is a graduate seminar and not a primarily lecture-based class. You will learn not only from the lectures, but also from the readings, your own research and your classmates' questions and comments.

Most meetings will be synchronous and on-line, but there will also be a couple of asynchronous lectures.
