

INSTITUTE OF CRIMINOLOGY AND CRIMINAL JUSTICE (ICCJ) RESEARCH and COMMUNITY ENGAGEMENT STUDENT SUPPORT FUNDS

WINTER 2022

Are you working on a research paper that explores anti-racism or decolonization?

OR

Are you actively volunteering or working with a community project based on anti-racist or decolonial objectives?

If so, consider applying for the ICCJs Research and Community Engagement Funds.

The ICCJ has established two sets of funds to support students committed to furthering their knowledge of, and to actively addressing structural racism and colonization. Each award has a value of $1000.

1. Anti-racism and Decolonization Research Support Funds (2 awards to be granted)

ICCJ students working on research exploring anti-racism or decolonization may apply for a Support Fund. Examples of research projects include, but are not limited to:

- research undertaken for courses,
- written course papers (examples include CRCJ 4001 level courses. Please note, you are not limited to these courses, these are examples only)
- research undertaken with work or volunteer positions,
- research conducted for your own interests or commitments, aspirational research plans for your future.

How to apply?

- Provide a 1-page (single spaced, 12pt. font, Times New Roman) letter explaining what you have learned as a Criminology student at the ICCJ, and how you intend to use this knowledge to engage in future research that explores an anti-racist or decolonial framework.
- Include a copy of research paper
- Include a copy of your resume/CV.

Submit your application via email by sending the files to: criminology@carleton.ca under the subject line: Student awards application.
