Course description and readings
We consider some of the principal policy debates around international trade and international monetary economics, in the context of international aspects of economic development, with a specific focus on emerging economies — in particular, India. Thematic foci this term will be the “Bhagwati-Sen debate” and the “gilded age analogy”. Topics will be discussed in detail in the first class. There are four required books. Additional required materials will be assigned during the term and will be considered an addendum to this outline.

The books are on order at the university bookshop; or you may purchase them electronically at your favourite (e-)bookseller.

Evaluation
The course will be run in a mixed lecture and seminar format. The course evaluation consists of two components: a seminar grade, based on regular attendance, class participation, in-class seminar presentations, and short writing assignments, worth 50% of the course grade; and a research paper, due in the last class, worth 50% of the course grade. Details will be discussed in the first and subsequent classes and will be considered an addendum to this outline.
