DESCRIPTION:
Students in this seminar will examine the intersection of the politics of Indigeneity, settler colonialism, affect studies and the production of literary texts. Western epistemologies often contrast and separate emotion and reason with the former belonging to the private sphere and the latter belonging to the public. Emotions are assumed to be innate “reactions” to circumstance whereas reason is perceived as the source of neutral and determined decision-making. Queer and anti-colonial theorists have suggested that emotions are readily constructed and invariably deployed in the public sphere by numerous actors in complex ways. Therefore, feeling can be deployed as an imperial technology used to bolster the imposition of assimilationist and neoliberal projects. On the other hand, feelings may be used subvert dominant understandings and emotional reactions so they can be employed as a form of resistance and resurgence. Specifically, this course will focus on Indigenous affect criticism to reveal how the circulation of specific public feelings such as trauma, love and healing are deeply imbricated with significant issues such as residential schooling, missing and murdered aboriginal women and economic racism. Accompanying the study of affect in Indigenous literatures is an exploration of literary ethics, the politics of adaptation and cultural production in Canada.

Evaluation of Course

Participation (25%): This mark will be based on your attendance at, preparation for and participation in discussion groups. I expect that all students to have done the readings assigned for the seminar and have come to class with questions and issues to discuss.

90-100%: A student always comes to class well prepared and makes exceptional contributions to discussion, demonstrating a critical engagement with the course material.

85-89%: A student consistently comes to class well prepared and contributes to discussion frequently and in a manner that demonstrates an excellent understanding of the course material.

80-84%: A student’s frequent contributions indicate that s/he has read all assigned material and has a good understanding of the issues discussed in the readings.

70-79%: A student’s occasional contributions indicate that s/he has read all assigned material and has made a serious attempt to understand and engage with it; however, the student’s contributions only sometimes demonstrate depth of understanding of the material.

60-69%: A student contributes sporadically and does not consistently demonstrate that s/he has read the course materials.

less than 60%: A student contributes rarely and is often unprepared and unable to contribute to discussion or engage with the material.

Presentation of Readings (25%): Each week one or two students are responsible for leading and facilitating the seminar for that week. At the beginning of the seminar students will present on the week’s readings, identifying key themes and debates as well as tying readings to course themes and previous readings.

Presentation of Final Paper Research (10%): On the final day of classes, students will present the topic and main arguments of their final paper to the class. This presentation should be short, approximately ten minutes in length. Students must adhere to time limits to ensure adequate discussion is allowed. Assignment Due: April 4, 2015

Final Research Paper (40%): Each student will write a 15-20 page paper that addresses the themes of affect or emotion in the public sphere. A more detailed breakdown of this assignment will be discussed and posted during the Methods and Ethics class on January, 31 2015. Each student should contact me via email or on my office hours to discuss the topic of their paper. This final research paper is due: April 8, 2015 (although I encourage you to hand the assignment in on the 4th when after your presentation).

LATE ASSIGNMENTS ARE NOT ACCEPTED EXCEPT FOR OFFICIALLY DOCUMENTED REASONS.

PLAGIARISM
The University Senate defines plagiarism as “presenting, whether intentional or not, the ideas, expression of ideas or work of others as one’s own.” This can include:
• reproducing or paraphrasing portions of someone else’s published or unpublished material, regardless of the source, and presenting these as one’s own without proper citation or reference to the original source;
• submitting a take-home examination, essay, laboratory report or other assignment written, in whole or in part, by someone else;
• using ideas or direct, verbatim quotations, or paraphrased material, concepts, or ideas without appropriate acknowledgment in any academic assignment;
• using another’s data or research findings;
• failing to acknowledge sources through the use of proper citations when using another’s works and/or failing to use quotation marks;
• handing in "substantially the same piece of work for academic credit more than once without prior written permission of the course instructor in which the submission occurs."

Plagiarism is a serious offence, which cannot be resolved directly with the course’s instructor. The Associate Deans of the Faculty conduct a rigorous investigation, including an interview with the student, when an instructor suspects a piece of work has been plagiarized. Penalties are not trivial. They range from a mark of zero for the plagiarized work to a final grade of "F" for the course, and even suspension from all studies or expulsion from the University.

A+ = 90-100  B = 73-76  C = 60-62
