

WGST [5907A]: Researching Women's and Gender Issues

This course is structured as a blended learning graduate seminar to explore the various debates, aspects, implications, and challenges of feminist research practices. We will delve into core issues within feminist epistemologies, methodologies and politics, and ways in which they are applicable across the social sciences and your own research interests. The course uses a mix of class meetings and asynchronous activities. All asynchronous activities, including lecture videos, slides, and transcripts, assignment instructions and dropboxes, as well as relevant course assignments will be communicated and managed via Brightspace. It is your responsibility to check the course page regularly and keep up with deadlines. You will require reliable high-speed Internet access and a computer. Webcam and a headset with a microphone are recommended.
