The Undergraduate Recruitment Issue

TALCES

Welcome to FPA Voices Message from our Dean

Choosing a university is one of life's biggest decisions.

There are so many factors to consider.

What do I want to study? Where will I live? At home or away? Will I like it? Will I succeed?

Right now, grade 12 students all over the country are trying to answer those questions.

And this month, FPA Voices is created with those students in mind.

In this issue, we'll tell you about Carleton's Capital Advantage, as well as fantastic opportunities you can find here in FPA's academic units:

- International learning experiences
- Undergraduate research projects
- Internships and co-ops
- The FPA Ambassadors program
- The FPA Connects series
- Free lectures and events

Plus, check out our Career Paths article with a link to alumni profiles and career data organized by academic program.

We've also created a virtual tour of FPA facilities and the Carleton campus for prospective students. You can find it on our website here.

At FPA, we're looking for students who are curious about the world around them, who love learning and the exchange of ideas, and who want to help build better societies—both at home and abroad.

Regardless of which of our programs you choose, those beliefs are at the heart of what we do here.

If you know a student who is thinking about university, I invite you to share this publication with them. We would love to welcome them into the FPA family.

Wishing you well,

André Plourde Dean, Faculty of Public Affairs Carleton University

Areas of Study in FPA:

- African Studies
- Global and International Studies
- Public Affairs and Policy Management
- Political Management
- Criminology and Criminal Justice
- Economics
- European, Russian and Eurasian Studies
- International Affairs
- Infrastructure Protection and
- International Security
- Journalism and Communication
- Law and Legal Studies
- Political Economy
- Political Science
- Public Policy and Administration
- Indigenous Policy and Administration
- Philanthropy and Nonprofit Leadership
- Sustainable Energy Policy
- Social Work

When Professor Martin Geiger arrived from Germany, he brought along the idea of informal discussion groups made up of undergraduates and graduate students, international scholars and professors.

Once here, he launched the "Mobility & Politics" group—a 'laid-back' get-together that now has moved well beyond a simple discussion club and has become a student-faculty research cluster.

Many of Professor Geiger's students have ended up conducting their own research—on refugees, foreign workers, borders and other aspects of migration politics.

We asked Professor Geiger and one of his undergraduate students, Tatheer Ali, to explain how undergraduates turn into researchers—something that happens throughout the Faculty of Public Affairs.

Professor Geiger, what prompted you to start encouraging undergraduates to conduct research?

I think it's important that students get a chance early on to work with professors and other undergraduate, graduate, and international students.

As they work together on projects, they get early hands-on experience and learn not only from me, but from the other students. It complements the classroom experience.

So when I meet knowledgeable, highly interested students equipped with communication skills and an interest in research, I usually ask them to get involved. They are often surprised, as they have not thought about it or been asked before.

What kind of research can undergraduates do?

After some training, I assign them tasks like researching government sources or other documents, gathering and analyzing expert interviews, or assisting me in organizing events and applying for project funding. I also try to bring them to meetings and conferences held here at Carleton or elsewhere. I like the idea of a "win-win" scenario: students can do a project they're genuinely interested in that's also related to my work.

Tatheer, it seems you've discovered one of those win-win situations. You're researching Canadian government sources as a research assistant for Professor Geiger, but also working towards your Honours Research Essay (HRE).

Professor Geiger helped me identify a topic for my Honours Research Essay (HRE)— the temporary foreign workers program in Canada—that touched on my interests in international development and economics. While I do my own small project, I also have the chance to learn and contribute to his bigger research project.

You're a member of Professor Geiger's "Mobility & Politics" group. How has this helped you?

I've met other undergraduate and graduate students—even PhDs and Post-Docs from other countries—and I've learned so much from our discussions about migration and refugee issues. It's interesting to hear how other students, scholars and even practitioners working for the United Nations, for example, have become involved in the field.

Professor Geiger, what's next for this group?

All of the students—undergraduate and graduate—are currently assisting me in organizing an international workshop for FPA Research Month in the spring. They will all be contributing, by providing well-researched talks and research posters to this event.

More research opportunities Undergraduate Research

Undergraduate Research Showcase
This annual event highlights the best undergraduate research across the Faculty of Public Affairs during FPA Research
Month, which takes place in the winter term. Students create poster presentations representing research they conducted in their field of study.

180HRE

Many of our students write an Honours Research Essay (HRE), which provides them with an opportunity to create an independent research project under the supervision of a faculty member.

The 180HRE contest challenges those students to encapsulate their research project into a 180-second presentation, delivered in front of Carleton University administrators, professors, and students.

FPA Ambassadors

FPA Ambassadors play a key role in our Faculty by welcoming guests and assisting with operations at FPA events, such as our annual lectures, panel discussions and celebrations. They also volunteer as bloggers and writers for the FPA website.

When second-year journalism student Sarina Bhaiwala joined the Ambassadors last year, she saw it as a way to meet students outside of the School of Journalism and Communication. What she didn't expect was a personal conversation with the Chief International Correspondent for the BBC.

"I volunteered at a lecture by the BBC's Lyse Doucet and I asked her if she had any advice for young journalists," says Bhaiwala. "She told me to seize opportunities, to put yourself out there, and to try to get published. It was really incredible to have that opportunity!"

Bhaiwala is one of about 20 volunteers who staff FPA's many events throughout the year. She says it's been a chance to learn about new academic subjects, as well.

"It really broadens your knowledge," says Bhaiwala, "and I believe that, as global citizens, we should be as knowledgeable as we can be."

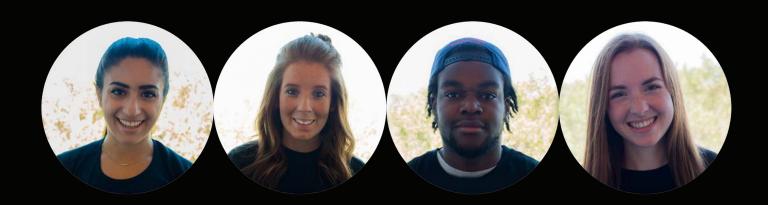

The FPA Ambassadors program is one of the many opportunities for students to volunteer and get involved on the Carleton University campus.

Learn more about the FPA Ambassadors

Our Ambassadors:

Ateshia Irabor
Cassandra Wood
Clive Ngan
Darcy Daoust
Emily Ruso
Frohan Foroutan
Greer Gemin
Hannah McElderry
Jennafer Hartman
Kristine Lee
Leslie Okrah

Lia Pizarro
Mpamba Nzowa
Nadia Awata
Rachel McLaughlin
Rumya Nithiananthan
Ryley White
Sarina Bhaiwala
Vincent Le
Emily Reed
Jasmine Law

Career Paths

What our alumni are doing and how their degree helped them get there.

Carly Jacuk

Occupation: Fund Development Coordinator, Big Brothers Big Sisters Ottawa & Renfrew County

Degree and Year:

BA Psychology, Concordia University (13). BA Honours, Law, Carleton University (15).

What does a fund development coordinator do?

My job is to expand our organization's fundraising base by building relationships with donors and corporate groups in our community and seeking support from foundations.

How did your experience at Carleton help you on the job?

My law degree has helped me to successfully construct and communicate arguments on behalf of our organization to gain support from potential donors and partners – to show them the impact our programs have on the community. It even helps in job interviews where you need to build a case for yourself. Plus, the critical thinking, writing, and communication skills I gained at Carleton have been invaluable.

Before you returned to university, you worked as a front-line worker with chronically homeless women. Why did you decide to earn a second degree in law?

I was working with women who had no other options for housing, often due to chronic addictions and severe mental illness. "The only fight you lose is the one you don't show up to."

It was both challenging and rewarding, but I felt limited in the change I could make on a broader scale. As important as the work is, at a front-line level, I didn't feel as though I could do a lot more than meet their day-to-day needs. Now I feel like I'm working on the mezzo level — supporting a charity that helps at-risk youth to see opportunity and reach their full potential.

What advice would you offer students who are just starting out in university?

Seek out opportunities that complement your degree. I found a volunteer position at the United Nations Association of Canada that not only led to a summer job, but really impressed interviewers after I graduated. I also acted as the Editor-in-Chief of the Carleton University Journal of Legal Studies. A lot of graduates have good grades, but those extra-curricular activities really set you apart.

One sentence to describe your strategy to success.

My dad always said, "The only fight you lose is the one you don't show up to."

Whether it's a year-long exchange program or a one-week excursion, we believe international learning experiences are an invaluable part of an FPA degree.

Alternative Spring Break

Each year, dozens of Carleton students spend their spring break volunteering with local community organizations and schools in places like Honduras, Nicaragua, Guatemala, and New Orleans.

The Alternative Spring Break program is often described as "eye-opening" and "lifealtering" by participants, and has helped many students choose their future career paths.

Peruvian Internship: Arthur Kroeger College

A fully-sponsored six week internship in Urubamba, Peru is awarded to a select group in the Bachelor of Public Affairs and Policy Management program (BPAPM) each year.

Interns work with a project run by the group Nexos Voluntarios in the high Andes region. In 2015, BPAPM students volunteered for a public awareness campaign to combat racism directed at the indigenous Peruvian population.

Centre for Media and Transitional Societies Internship: Journalism and Communication

This internship places journalism students with media organizations in the Third World—most recently with the organization Farm Radio International.

Students spend at least two months working as journalism and communication interns in countries such as Sri Lanka, Malawi, Vietnam, Burkina Faso, Ghana, or Tanzania.

African Studies Abroad: African Studies

This course enables students to study a selected topic in African Studies with a Carleton professor in an African region in which the professor carries out research. The students also learn from African experts on the topic. Recent courses have been taught in Ghana, Rwanda, and Malawi.

The Washington Center Internship Agreement: Political Science

Students are placed in internship positions throughout the United States government and with volunteer organizations in Washington, D.C. The one semester program includes site visits, Congressional briefings, and lectures.

Bachelor of Global and International Studies (BGInS)

The Bachelor of Global and International Studies (BGInS) degree capitalizes on undergraduates' desire to learn about their field of study from an international perspective.

BGInS allows students to pursue their education from a global perspective through 12 different specializations.

It also requires study in a second language, as well as an international learning experience that is closely tied to the preparation these students receive in the classroom.

International Student Services Office (ISSO)

The ISSO manages the largest number of study abroad programs on the Carleton campus. Opportunities range from yearlong exchange programs with international universities, summer language programs, and research opportunities in other countries.

Carleton's Cap

Carleton's
location in the National Capital gives our students
learning and work opportunities they won't find anywhere else.

The Educational Advantage

Government officials, politicians, and non-profit and industry leaders are frequent guests in our classrooms because they work right here in Ottawa.

Professor James Milner offers one example. Every year, the political science professor invites the Canadian director of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR) to campus to speak to his students.
In turn, they have an opportunity to ask their guest questions about international politics as well as their career paths.

That same experience is found in all of our programs of study. National and international leaders—whether government, non-profit or industry—come right to us.

The Workplace Advantage

Canada's capital offers a unique and rich opportunity for workplace internships, ital Advantage

field visits, co-ops, and jobs. Many of our students intern with MPs on Parliament Hill, at nongovernmental organizations, and at social service agencies, as well as serve in the House of Commons or the Senate as a student page.

It's an opportunity that could only happen here!

The Research Advantage

From the National Archives to many national headquarters, Ottawa offers FPA students a wealth of materials to draw on. Faculty members and students have access to archives and records, as well as the people who manage them, right here in Ottawa.

The Ottawa Advantage

We wouldn't want to give the impression that Ottawa is all work and no play! Between the Ottawa Senators and the Ottawa RedBlacks, hip neighbourhoods like the Glebe and the Byward Market, shopping malls, museums, great music venues, and festivals, there are activities whatever your interest. Plus, where else can you find a 7.8 kilometre long ice rink right next to your campus?

Entrepreneurial Cuba: The Changing Policy Environment

A lively look at the rise of entrepreneurs in Raúl Castro's Cuba.

Thursday, 22 October 2015 5:30 - 7:00p.m. Irene's Pub (885 Bank St.) Free Admission 885 Bank St. Ottawa

2015 St.)

Authorneels

Register at carleton.ca/fpa

FPA Connects

A Fall event series created especially for undergrads.

FPA Connects is about building connections between FPA students and their university, as well as local, national, and international communities.

This year's theme for FPA Connects is Engage, Elect, Energize: Civic Engagement and the 2015 Federal Election. We're hosting three special events as part of this theme:

Engage

FPA is hosting a screening of the documentary "The Drop: Why Young People Don't Vote" on September 29th. After the film, students will have a chance to ask questions of two stars of the documentary: Maalik Shakoor, a youth leader from Ferguson, Missouri, and Morgan Baskin, who ran for mayor of Toronto at age 18. They'll be joined onstage by the film's director, Kyle McCachen, and Carleton Political Science Professor Bill Cross to talk about the youth vote.

Flect

We're hosting an Election Night Party to watch the results roll in on the big screen. FPA students are invited to join us for a panel discussion with FPA's own political pundits, as well as a social reception.

Energize

"How to Get That Job" will feature a panel of FPA alumni who will share their secrets to success in finding jobs in the political realm. The event will be followed by a networking reception.

Real world on-the-job experience is an important part of transitioning into a career after graduation. That's why our staff work so hard to help FPA students find co-op and internship opportunities in areas that interest them.

The Ottawa region is an ideal place for this experience, thanks to the wealth of opportunities in the federal government and in the national offices of various organizations.

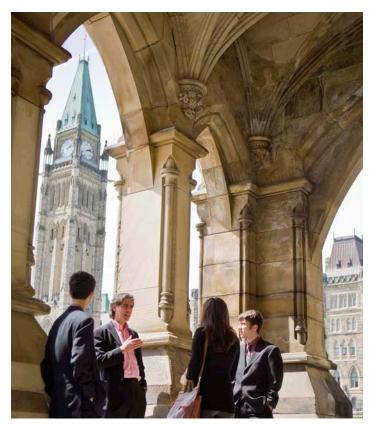

Here are just a few examples of the many workplace opportunities we offer students:

Co-op@Carleton

Co-operative education combines traditional, in-class education with handson experience. Co-ops are available in several FPA majors: Law and Legal Studies; Economics; European, Russian and Eurasian Studies; Communication Studies; Political

The Internship/Co-op Experience

Science; and BPAPM.

Field Placement: Criminology and Criminal Justice

This popular program includes practical experience in various aspects of criminal justice as well as a seminar class that offers an academic grounding and discussion.

Social Work Practicum

Required for all social work students, the practicum includes an academic seminar as well as a field placement in a community agency. It's considered the linchpin of the social work degree.

International Internships

As highlighted in The International Experience article, students have many opportunities to gain experience abroad.

Events

Law and Legal Studies: JurisTalk Seminar with Dr. Trish Salah of Queen's University.

October 1

More information here

EURUS: Climate Change and Renewable Energy Policy in the EU and Canada Workshop.

October 1-2

More information here

African Studies: "Can the Somali Speak?" and "After #CadaanStudies: Decolonizing and Democratizing Area Studies".

October 7-8

More information here

Economics: Seminar Series.

October 9 and 23

More information here

Political Science: Bell Chair Lecture: Antony Green, Australian Broadcasting Corporation. October 15

More information here

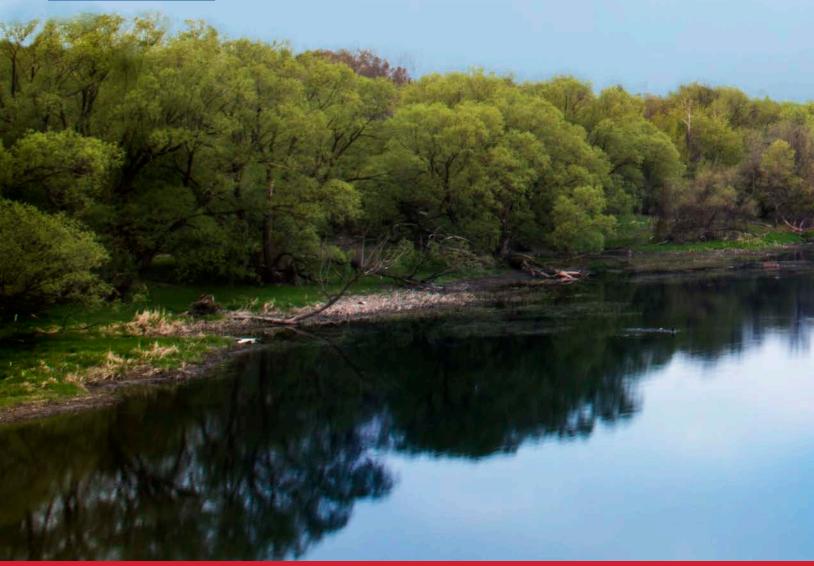

Global and International Studies/Political

Science: First-hand Report from a Syrian

Refugee Camp.

October 15

Contact: martingeiger@cunet.carleton.ca

FPA: FPA Connects: Election Night Party.

October 19

More information here

Law and Legal Studies/Canadian Studies:

"Wampum: The Language of Creation" with Darren Bonaparte.

October 20

More information here

SPPA: Twelve O'Clock Talks: Weekly lunchtime lectures hosted by the School of Public Policy and Administration.

October 20

More information here

FPA: "Entrepreneurial Cuba: The Changing Policy Environment": Author Meets Readers featuring Arch Ritter, Distinguished Research Professor Emeritus in the Department of Economics and Norman Paterson School of International Affairs.

October 22

More information here

Political Science: "What's Up with Parliament: Federal Election Retrospective": Bell Chair

Faculty units can submit upcoming events here

carleton.ca/fpa/voices

