

CALL FOR PAPERS:

RELIGION OUT OF BOUNDS

Submit abstracts of 250 words by
Feb. 14, 2019 to zccolloquium2019@gmail.com

MA, doctoral, and undergrad Honours students are invited to present their research that engages with this theme, with an eye to the reasons and ways religion is delimited and defined by subjects and researchers. Projects from all historical periods are welcomed, including but not limited to students from Religion, Anthropology, Architecture, Art History, History, Humanities, Law, Literature, Political Science, Sociology, and Women and Gender Studies.

Submission requirements: your name, program and institutional affiliation, title of paper, and any A/V requirements. Papers should be 15 minutes (2000 words) in length. All submissions received will be acknowledged. Acceptances will be emailed by Feb 28, 2019.

The Zelikovitz Centre for Jewish Studies
2019 Annual Student Colloquium
April 12, 2019

This student colloquium seeks research that brings phenomena “on the edge” of normative religion to light in order to highlight the motivations for and methods of boundary construction for practitioners and researchers. While religion is assumed in modern, secular society to be contained in domains that are private and affiliated with an institution and its authorities, religious ideas and practices do not remain within these historically constructed boundaries, particularly in times of increased change and movement of people and ideas.
