COURSE DESCRIPTION

The topics of this course vary from year to year and are announced in advance of registration.

This course analyzes themes, approaches, and debates in the field of law, culture, and the humanities. Drawing on Frankfurt School theory (and especially the writings of Herbert Marcuse), we will consider the argument that liberal law is complicit with mass repression under late capitalism. In this context, we will consider the potentialities and pitfalls of ‘culture’ and the possibility of liberation. Primary materials considered span theoretical writings, cultural criticism, films, and music. These texts present different modes and means of inquiring into the assumptions and aspirations that we ascribe to law.

REQUIRED TEXTS
All readings will be provided on ARES and/or CU Learn. Please see the class schedule below for all assigned and recommended readings.

SUPPLEMENTARY TEXTS

There are copies in the University Library. Should you wish to purchase either of these supplementary texts, copies are available (or available to order) at: Octopus Books, the University Bookstore, Amazon, or Abe Books. Used copies are usually available on Amazon and/or Abe Books.
EVALUATION

Standing in a course is determined by the course instructor subject to the approval of the Department and of the Faculty Dean. This means that grades submitted by the instructor may be subject to revision. No grades are final until they have been approved by the Department and the Dean.

i) Attendance (10%)

ii) Participation (10%)

iii) 150-word abstract (5%)
    Graded as Pass/Fail: all competent abstracts submitted on time will receive full-marks.

iv) In-class presentation (15%)

    The paper should respond to an assigned reading from one of the first six classes; this paper is due before the class in which that reading is to be discussed (20%)

vi) 3,000-word final paper (40%)

SCHEDULE

Part I: Law, the Humanities, and the Possibility of Liberation

Class 1, January 9: Introduction
No assigned reading this week

* 150-word abstract for class 2 due on CU Learn by 23:55 on January 15 *

Class 2, January 16: What is Law, Culture, and the Humanities?
Required reading:
LCH 2018 Conference Program: Titles and Abstracts [PDF to be provided on CU Learn].

For class this week, you should read and make notes on a peer reviewed, published academic essay, journal article, or book chapter of your choice in the field of law, culture and humanities. Make a bibliographic reference of what you have read; you should come to class ready to share and discuss your chosen reading. For some suggestions on how to get started and where to look, read the note directly below under the “Suggested further reading” subheading.

Suggested further reading:
“Law, Culture, and the Humanities” has generated a rich bibliography: over the past twenty or thirty years, dozens of readers, edited volumes, and special issues of journals addressing the conjunction of cultural studies and legal studies have been published. Indeed, as long ago as 1951, Journal of Legal Education published “An Open Letter Proposing a School of Cultural Legal Studies” written by Jerome Hall (Vol. 5, No. 1, 1951: 91–4). To get a sense of the range of work carried out under the sign of “Law, Culture, and the Humanities,” try doing a few searches in the library catalogue using the following key words: “cultural studies and legal studies,” “law and culture,” “law and humanities,” and “law and literature.” Play around and be inventive with the search terms: you might like to try, for example, “law and film,” “law and music,” or even “law and video games.” You will get plenty of results. Alternatively (or in addition), skimming the introductions and any essays of interest in the following volumes would also be a good way to get started:

Another strategy would be to browse the major journals in the field; any of the following would be good places to start: Law, Culture, and the Humanities, Law & Literature, Law & Humanities, Yale Journal of Law and Humanities. This list is not exhaustive. You should also be aware that “law” will come up as a subject of inquiry in many “non-law” journals. So, you might also like to search for articles on law or legal themes in cultural studies, literary studies, and film studies journals.

Task for Class 2: Drawing on your reading of the LCH conference programme and abstracts, as well as on your research, write a 150-word abstract of your own for an essay you would like to write (you do not have to write the actual essay!) Reading through the abstracts will give you a good idea of how to go about this task; for further guidance on abstract writing see: https://writingcenter.unc.edu/tips-and-tools/abstracts/. The abstract is due on CU Learn by 23:55 on January 15.
