

Hybrid Threats and Hybrid Truth: Towards a Criminology of Dark Disorder

Wednesday, April 10

Loeb Building D492

Dr. Willem de Lint

10:00 - 11:30

Amongst governments, there is a growing interest in hybrid threats. Adopted from military discourse (hybrid war), a hybrid threat discourse pushes civil society issues including public order, crime control and civic participation under a military/national security template. In this paper I explore security ordering through hybrid threat representations based primarily on a critical political reading of the reports, strategic analysis and working papers of the European Centre for Countering Hybrid Threats (HybridCoE). In this, I am concerned with what I refer to as dark disorder. I ask the question, are attributions of the strength, vitality, scale, and suitability of targets made by agents under the auspices of hybrid threat centres designations that as much discover as project dark disorder? I argue that a more nuanced understanding of hybrid threat may be found by situating analysis within a critical societal security discourse.

Willem de Lint is Professor in Criminal Justice at Flinders University, South Australia, Australia. He is the author most recently of Narrating Injustice Survival. His current book projects are Dark Militarism and Apex Crime and Critical Forensics. In addition to victimology and military and security studies and critical criminology, he has researched and published in several areas of policing (public order policing, intelligence-led policing, police role).

Department of Law and Legal Studies
CARLETON UNIVERSITY

Institute of Criminology and Criminal Justice
CARLETON UNIVERSITY