

Canada's Great War and its Legacy

In this 6-week lecture series, renowned Canadian military historian Dr. Tim Cook will share his award-winning research on Canada and the Great War, on the home front and overseas, including hundreds of rare photographs, works of art, and archival material.

A new sense of identity was forged through the service and sacrifice of Canadians, even as the country was torn apart along existing and new fault lines. Canada was never the same. Together with Dr. Cook, you will explore the soldiers' experience and the contested memory of the war, including the impact of Canada's 66,000 dead, the veterans' experience, and memorial making.

Dr. Tim Cook, CM, FRSC is the Director of Research at the Canadian War Museum, where he has curated permanent, temporary, travelling, and digital exhibitions. His 13 books of Canadian military history have been recognized with multiple awards.
