Barbara Plett Usher has been the BBC’s State Department Correspondent since August 2014 and is currently on a temporary assignment in Jerusalem, covering among other things, the Israeli election. She is a Canadian who’s worked in foreign news for 26 years – most of that time for the BBC – reporting from postings in the Middle East, South Asia, and at the United Nations Headquarters in New York. Her experience ranges from the early years of the Oslo Peace Process and the second Palestinian intifadah to the assassination of Pakistan’s opposition leader Benazir Bhutto and the Security Council’s response to the Arab Revolutions. She completed a Bachelor of Journalism at Carleton University in 1991.
