 - The historical development of Canadian trade policy – an introduction to Canadian trade policy and practice viewed through the lens of Canadian history (NPSIA summers of 1998, 1999, 2000).
 - The historical development of US trade policy – an introduction to US trade policy and practice viewed through the lens of US history (Monterey Institute 1997).
 - Core seminar on international political economy (NPSIA fall 1996).

RESEARCH FUNDING

Given my background and experience as a former government trade official, it has not been necessary for me to seek traditional funding for academic research from foundations, SSHRC, and other funding agencies. Instead, I have had no difficulty raising funds, either directly or through the Centre for Trade Policy and Law, for contract and directed research from governments, international organizations, and business groups, all of which indirectly funds my academic research and writing. Over the past ten years, I have raised in excess of $ 500,000 from such sources, much of which has been used to support graduate students and associates at the Centre for Trade Policy and Law.

For the 2004-5 academic year, I was awarded the Fulbright-Woodrow Wilson Center Visiting Research Chair in Canada-US Relations, which carries a stipend of US $ 25,000.

RESEARCH IN PROGRESS

I am currently working on three major projects: a book-length study of the relationship between science and public policy, focused largely on climate change policy; regulatory reform; and continuing work on post-mercantilist trade policy, with particular focus on Canadian trade interests in the United States and in East Asia.

Over the course of 2013-14, I was on sabbatical, focused exclusively on my book on science and public policy. The manuscript is now complete and ready for publication.
