Course Description
This course is meant to introduce you to some of the most fundamental aspects of three key areas of philosophy: Philosophy of Mind, Epistemology and Philosophy of Language. This will be done through studying the work of major (mostly contemporary) philosophers. We will be reading about and discussing questions such as: What is the relation between mind and body? Do we persist as one and the same person over time? How do we know anything? How is social reality constructed? How did language begin? What is the meaning of words?

Course Materials
All the readings will be freely available on Ares, the digital reserve system. You can access it through this link: https://libares01.carleton.ca (there will be a link on cuLearn that directs you to Ares as well). Also, most of the readings are freely available on the internet.

Course Requirements
You are required to attend class. Discussion is an important part of the coursework and you will need to be there to participate. You are also expected to do all of the assigned readings. Written requirements will involve two in-class midterm exams (the first will be worth 25%; the second will be worth 35%), consisting mainly of short identification questions and short essay questions; and one 4-5 page (1100-1500 words) final take-home essay (40%). The essay must be formatted with a commonly used 12pt serif font (such as Times New Roman), double-spaced with 1-inch margins on all sides and submitted as a word file. Unless otherwise informed, you should submit your essay through the cuLearn course website. Late essay submissions will be penalized one letter step per day. So, for example, if an A paper is handed in a day late, it will receive an A-; if it is handed in two days late, it will receive a B+ and so forth. Late essays will be accepted without penalty only if there is a legitimate reason. You must do all of the written assignments and attend class regularly to get a passing grade. The grade percentages listed above apply only to those who do all of the work. Announcements will be made, assignments given, and materials presented in class. You are responsible to keep track of any material missed due to absence.
Class Schedule, Topics and Readings

The class is divided, roughly, into three thematic priorities; however, all parts are somewhat related and thus overlap to a certain degree. You will get the most out of the lectures if you have the assigned readings done before the corresponding class takes place. Moreover, by building on familiarity with the readings, some of the material presented in class will go beyond what is covered in the readings.
