I. Course Description and Objectives

By almost any measure, American foreign policy is in a serious crisis today. While some attribute this to the policies of the current President of the United States, others argue that the problems facing the country are deeply rooted in the history of American foreign policy. This course focuses on a specific feature of American foreign policy; namely the rise and fall of the American empire. The question of whether or not the United States is an empire is contentious. So too is the question of whether or not the American empire, or the American liberal hegemonic order, is experiencing relative decline today. This course will examine and assess the numerous debates and controversies that have arisen in response to these two fundamental questions.

To help address these questions, we engage in a historical overview of American foreign policy. In order to assess the imperial character of American foreign policy, we have to go back to the early nineteenth century. We then devote specific attention to the post-World War Two period to the present. Different theoretical perspectives on the character and nature of American foreign policy will be provided. We will examine some of the problems that have been identified in the literature on American foreign policy and conclude by considering some of the recommendations that scholars have provided for an alternative foreign policy.

The main objective of the course is for students to comprehend the past and present character of American foreign policy. This will be facilitated by reading some of the pertinent literature by scholars who study American foreign policy. This leads to the second objective of understanding the theoretical underpinnings of, and debates about, contemporary American foreign policy. By actively participating in this seminar, and by reading the course material, students will become familiar with the current debates and controversies about both the study and practice of American foreign policy.

III. Course Format

This course will be conducted entirely synchronously (real-time, “live”) in Zoom. You can access the Zoom session via the link posted on the course brightspace page. The class will meet every Tuesday and Thursday from 8:35am – 11:25am. I will begin each class with a brief overview of the material that we will be discussing in the seminar. As detailed below, my opening remarks will be based, in part, on the check-in assignment that you submit to me twenty-four hours before each seminar. Following my remarks, there will be class discussion and debate about the assigned material. During the semester, I will be available to answer your questions, discuss the material, and address any of your concerns or issues. This can be done via email, phone call or a personal zoom meeting.

IV. Learning Outcomes

By the end of the course, students will be able to:

- Recognize historical facts, details, and information about American foreign policy.
- Describe and interpret the history of American foreign policy.
- Demonstrate an understanding of the issues and debates about American foreign policy.
- Differentiate the periods and characteristics of American foreign policy.
- Assess the current debates about American foreign policy.
- Critique and defend different interpretations of American foreign policy.

V. Course Texts

There are two required texts for the course that are available for purchase at the Carleton University Bookstore. Both of the books are also available on Amazon as well as from the publishers (Picador and Oxford University Press). The required texts have been placed on reserve at the Carleton University library.

1. Daniel Immerwahr, How to Hide an Empire: A History of the Greater United States (Picador: New York: 2019).
2. Alexander Cooley and Daniel Nexon, Exit from Hegemony: The Unraveling of the American Global Order (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2020).

The weekly reading assignments have been placed on reserve in the library. You can access many of the assigned journal articles by using JSTOR and other search engines that are available on the Carleton University library website (<https://library.carleton.ca/>). All of the assigned readings can be directly accessed through ARES, which can be found on the course brightspace website.

VI. Course Requirements and Grading Policy

All assignments are to be submitted via brightspace.

- | | |
|---|-----|
| A. Weekly check-in (10 in total) | 15% |
| B. Reading Summaries (4 in total) | 25% |
| C. Newspaper Assignment..... | 10% |
| Due Date: May 20 | |
| D. Article Review Assignment..... | 20% |
| Due Date: June 12 | |
| E. Take-home Final Exam..... | 30% |
| Due Date: June 27, 2021 | |

VII. Explanations

A. You are required to submit 10 bi-weekly check-ins that are due 24 hours prior to class (due on Mondays by 9:00am and Wednesdays by 9:00am). Late assignments will not be accepted. Your weekly check-in assignment should be roughly one page (250-300 words). This assignment is to be turned-in using the Assignment submission tool in brightspace. The assignment is of great importance to the course because I will review all the check-in submissions and structure my opening remarks for each class on your comments. I will determine the grade at the end of the semester, which will be based on the number of check-ins that you submit as well as the quality of your submissions. I am looking for evidence that you completed and understood the assigned material for a given week.

There are two main questions of the check-in assignment:

1. What is one thing that you learned from the assigned reading? This could be a new concept, a theory, a historical fact, or information that you did not previously know. In your own words, you should briefly define or describe the concept, theory or information from the reading.
2. What is one thing you found to be either confusing or unclear about the assigned reading? This could be the author's argument or historical interpretation, a concept, a theory, or some specific aspect of the material. Please be as clear as possible in explaining what is not clear or confusing.

B. You are required to submit 4 two-page summaries of the assigned readings. These are due within a week of the material that you are summarizing. For example, if you selected to review the assigned reading of May 13, the assignment would be due on May 20. Please keep track of how many assignments you complete because once we run out of weekly topics it will be impossible for you to fulfill this course requirement.

Your main task is to provide a succinct summary of the assigned reading. You cannot simply repeat what you read, because you only have two pages to provide a summary. When there are multiple readings assigned for a specific week, you are allowed to focus on a specific book chapter or article as long as you also provide an overall summary of the material assigned for a specific week. When writing your summary, you may wish to focus on a specific theme or issue that you find to be of special significance. I want you to engage the material and identify the strengths and weaknesses. Do you agree or disagree with the author's argument (be sure to identify the argument)? What did you find to be of interest and importance? I am looking for evidence that you understood the issues and debates that were covered in the assigned reading.

C. You are required to find and read a current newspaper article dealing with a topic or issue related to American foreign policy and submit a two-page summary/re-action paper. Please include the title of the article, the name of the newspaper, and the date when it was published. The Globe and Mail, NY Times, Washington Post, LA Times and the Guardian are all good choices. If possible, please include a link to the article that you have selected. The assignment is due May20.

D. You are required to write a 5-7 page review of an academic journal article dealing with contemporary American foreign policy. The more you read the more you will understand the central issues in American foreign policy. The article review is due June 12. There are many articles from different journals that you can select to read. The course outline includes a list of recommendations that you may wish to consider. If you want to be certain that you have selected an appropriate journal article, please consult with me.

There are two main aspects of the assignment. First, you should provide a concise summary of the article (the main argument, the theoretical framework, organization of the book, type of evidence employed). Second, you should relate the article you read to the course material and the debates and issues that have been raised in the assigned reading. How does your article speak to the themes and issues raised in the class? While you are reading the article, you should also be critically evaluating it. What are the strengths and weaknesses of the article, how convincing is the author's argument, how important of a contribution has the article made to the study of American foreign policy? These are the types of questions you should be answering when you write your article review.

Here are some journals to consider. Please note that I have not listed Foreign Affairs because the articles tend to be short and written for a non-academic audience.

Foreign Policy Analysis
Diplomatic History
International Security
Security Studies
International Affairs
Review of International Studies
American Political Science Review
International Studies Quarterly
Millennium: Journal of International Studies

D. The final exam will be a take-home exam. The questions will be distributed in class on June 17 and the assignment is due on June 27, 2021 at 12:00 p.m. There will be two or three questions to answer and each answer should be approximately 5- 7 pages (typed and double-spaced). More information about the final exam will be provided at the end of the term.

Plagiarism

The University Senate defines plagiarism as “presenting, whether intentional or not, the ideas, expression of ideas or work of others as one’s own.” This can include:

- reproducing or paraphrasing portions of someone else’s published or unpublished material, regardless of the source, and presenting these as one’s own without proper citation or reference to the original source;
- submitting a take-home examination, essay, laboratory report or other assignment written, in whole or in part, by someone else;
- using ideas or direct, verbatim quotations, or paraphrased material, concepts, or ideas without appropriate acknowledgment in any academic assignment;
- using another’s data or research findings;
- failing to acknowledge sources through the use of proper citations when using another’s works and/or failing to use quotation marks;
- handing in "substantially the same piece of work for academic credit more than once without prior written permission of the course instructor in which the submission occurs.

Plagiarism is a serious offence which cannot be resolved directly with the course’s instructor. The Associate Deans of the Faculty conduct a rigorous investigation, including an interview with the student, when an instructor suspects a piece of work has been plagiarized. Penalties are not trivial. They may include a mark of zero for the plagiarized work or a final grade of "F" for the course.
