PSCI 5501F/PECO 5501F/SCI5504F:
Feminist Perspectives on Law and Neoliberalism
Monday: 2:35-5:25pm
Room: 1524 Dunton Tower (Please confirm location on Carleton Central)
Instructor: Katie Cruz
Office: 1503 Dunton Tower. E-Mail: katie.cruz@carleton.ca
Aims and Learning Outcomes:

In this course, we will be concerned with accounts of feminist engagement with law and neoliberalism. It is common for scholars to describe state and legal relations and reasoning as neoliberal. Scholars also observe an ascendancy of feminist engagement with state and legal institutions that corresponds with the rise of neoliberalism. A common critique is that feminists that lack a redistributive agenda have installed themselves within, have been co-opted by, and are conspiring with, neoliberal legal institutions. We will begin by thinking through the relationship between neoliberalism and law. What is “neoliberalism” and what are the historical and contemporary connections with legal relations? What types of feminism have engaged with national and international legal orders and with what intentions and effects? Have feminist engagements with the law and state neglected redistributive and material concerns? How are we to assess the successes and failures of feminism and do terms such as “governance feminism”, “carceral feminism”, and “femonationalism” help or hinder our efforts?

Student learning outcomes for this course include:

- Demonstrating competence in key aspects of the tradition of feminist legal and political theorizing that concerns the relationship between the law and neoliberalism
- Demonstrating a working knowledge of how key concepts are applied to understand empirical developments
- Developing research skills in feminist legal and political theory

Organization and Assessment:

We meet weekly in seminar format. Students are expected to complete the required readings for each seminar, participate fully in discussions, and fulfill the written requirements.

Seminars are organized around texts that have had a significant impact on how we understand the relationship between feminism, law and neoliberalism. The seminar readings have been organized to allow students to gradually develop and situate their knowledge historically and empirically, so in relation to theories of neoliberalism, feminist legal theory, and empirical contexts that concerned feminist theorists and activists.

Each week will be led by a roundtable set of questions from students, in which each student will provide one or two questions to the group. These questions will be used to structure seminar discussions. Each week 2 students will be required to present a text from the ‘suggested reading list’ or chosen and with the agreement of the course leader. This presentation will follow on from our discussion of the ‘required reading’ and student questions.

The assessment for this course is based upon oral participation in seminar discussion and on two written assignments. Non-assessed feedback will be provided on your research essay outline:

- Oral participation: 25% (ongoing)
- Review essay: 25% (due Friday 8th November)
- Research essay outline: non-assessed feedback (due in anytime up until week 10 – Friday 15th November)
- Research essay: 50% (due Monday 9th December)

The oral participation component is assessed over the entire semester. Aspects of your participation that are graded include the quality of your interventions, the familiarity which you display with the assigned reading material, the comprehension of the material as demonstrated by your interventions, and the degree of value which your contributions add to the seminar discussion.

The written assignments are to be submitted via the appropriate assignment dropdown on cuLearn. Please use Word or PDF format.

The review essay is a critical assessment of the relationship between feminism, law and neoliberalism. This essay (MAXIMUM length 2000 words excluding notes and references) is worth 25% of your grade. You are to assess the strengths and weaknesses of how an author theorizes the relationship between law and neoliberalism from a feminist perspective. As such, your review should be an interrogation and engagement with how the author uses the tradition within which their work is situated. Given the length, it will be impossible to provide an exhaustive overview of the work in question; rather, you should interrogate one or two aspects of the text that you find particularly insightful or problematic, and which marks out an element of that author’s contribution to the field. (The essay is due Friday 8th November).

The research essay (MAXIMUM length 4000 words excluding notes and references) is worth 50% of your grade. It can be on any aspect of feminist legal and political theory that we touch upon during the course. The course director must approve the topic you develop. As part of the approval process you will receive feedback on a 500-word outline submitted by Friday of week 10. It should contain the title, a brief description of the problem you are interested in exploring, the research question you will formulate to explore your problem, an indication of how the paper will be organized, a sense of the relevant literature (with a select bibliography), and a summary of the intended argument. The completed research paper is due Monday 9th December.

- Course texts:

There is no set text for you to purchase. We will discuss online resources and books that might be useful in the first seminar. You may, however, find it useful to familiarize yourself with some of the texts, and critiques, of key “neoliberal feminists” via popular and quick reads, such as:

- Liza Featherstone (ed), False Choices: The Faux Feminism of Hillary Rodham Clinton (Verso 2016)

Sept 9 - Week 1: Introduction

Required reading:

- Joanne Conaghan, Law and Gender (Oxford University Press 2013). Please read Chapter 3 “Theorizing the Relationship Between Law and Gender”

- At some point in the first couple of weeks you should also read the following article, which is a response to Joanne Conaghan and will give you an idea of the dominant mode of legal reasoning: Leslie Green, “Gender and the Analytical Jurisprudential Mind” (2015) Oxford University Research Series, available at: https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=2650448

Plagiarism
The University Senate defines plagiarism as “presenting, whether intentional or not, the ideas, expression of ideas or work of others as one’s own.” This can include:

- reproducing or paraphrasing portions of someone else’s published or unpublished material, regardless of the source, and presenting these as one’s own without proper citation or reference to the original source;
- submitting a take-home examination, essay, laboratory report or other assignment written, in whole or in part, by someone else;
- using ideas or direct, verbatim quotations, or paraphrased material, concepts, or ideas without appropriate acknowledgment in any academic assignment;
- using another’s data or research findings;
- failing to acknowledge sources through the use of proper citations when using another’s works and/or failing to use quotation marks;
- handing in "substantially the same piece of work for academic credit more than once without prior written permission of the course instructor in which the submission occurs.

Plagiarism is a serious offence which cannot be resolved directly with the course’s instructor. The Associate Deans of the Faculty conduct a rigorous investigation, including an interview with the student, when an instructor suspects a piece of work has been plagiarized. Penalties are not trivial. They may include a mark of zero for the plagiarized work or a final grade of "F" for the course.

Student or professor materials created for this course (including presentations and posted notes, labs, case studies, assignments and exams) remain the intellectual property of the author(s). They are intended for personal use and may not be reproduced or redistributed without prior written consent of the author(s).

Submission and Return of Term Work
Papers must be submitted directly to the instructor according to the instructions in the course outline and will not be date-stamped in the departmental office. Late assignments may be submitted to the drop box in the corridor outside B640 Loeb. Assignments will be retrieved every business day at 4 p.m., stamped with that day's date, and then distributed to the instructor. For essays not returned in class please attach a stamped, self-addressed envelope if you wish to have your assignment returned by mail. Final exams are intended solely for the purpose of evaluation and will not be returned.

Grading
Standing in a course is determined by the course instructor, subject to the approval of the faculty Dean. Final standing in courses will be shown by alphabetical grades. The system of grades used, with corresponding grade points is:
