Course Description:

This course complements PSCI 6200 as one of the core courses in the Gender and Diversity field group in the Ph.D. program in Political Science. The course focuses in particular on comparative, empirical and international literature relevant to the field of gender and diversity. The course includes attention to a variety of intersectionalities and identities, including ethnicity, race, gender identity and sexual orientation. Assigned readings include a variety of influential texts, methodological debates, and empirical analyses of particular contexts.

The goals of the course include: 1) To help to prepare students for the Ph.D. comprehensive examination in Gender and Diversity, by guiding students through key texts and debates, 2) to develop further skills in critical reading, analysis and comparison of academic literature, 3) to explore questions of methodology in gender and diversity research, particularly in comparative and IR contexts, 4) to identify limitations in existing literature in this evolving field, while students move forward to identify their own future research contributions.

The course requires intensive examination and debate of assigned readings, and students are expected to have read all assigned reading in advance of the session in which they will be discussed. All students will be expected to participate actively in class discussions, and to be prepared to comment constructively on the presentations of their peers. Students are encouraged to share their particular research interests as relevant to the course discussions.

Readings:

Assigned readings will be available on Library Reserve, or in some cases, Web links will be provided to open-source material. Some readings will be accessible electronically through Carleton McOdrum Library's ARES system (which students can access through the course CuLearn page); others will be available through check-out at the Reserve desk in McOdrum Library.

Course Requirements:

The table shows the weight of each component of the final grade. A detailed description of each component follows the table.

Attendance and participation in class discussions	20%
Oral presentations: two, scheduled for two different themes of course discussion	2 x 5% = 10%
Reading response papers, two, on the same two course themes as the class presentations	2 x 10% = 20%
Presentation to class of research in progress, for the final research paper	10%
Final research paper	40%
TOTAL	100%

- Attendance and participation in class discussions: Students are expected to attend classes prepared to discuss all of the assigned readings in depth, and to participate actively in class discussion. Discussions may include work on particular questions circulated in advance.
- Oral presentations: The professor will draw up a schedule in which during weeks 2-9, one student will be responsible for initiating discussion on specific assigned readings, by giving a brief, focussed analytical reflection and critique of those readings. Each student will be expected to give two presentations, on two different class dates. Oral presentations should be succinct (ca. 10 minutes), and students should speak to their audience in an engaging manner: no reading from a prepared text, please.
- Reading response papers: Students will prepare two short papers (5-7 typed, double-spaced pages each) during the term, based on the same topics as their oral presentation; each paper will provide a critical and analytical discussion of the assigned readings for a particular week in the course. These essays should integrate, critique and contrast themes in the respective readings: they should NOT simply be descriptive summaries. The essays should answer a specific question about the literature under discussion: the instructor will periodically provide suggested questions for discussion. For the topics they choose, students are required to prepare their paper in advance of the course session in question, and to submit it to the instructor on the day of the scheduled oral presentation.
- Presentation to class of research in progress for final research paper. These presentations will take place in the final three weeks of class. In a brief presentation (maximum 15 minutes), students should present the following: the key research question to be examined; its position in the relevant literature; tentative findings to date; and areas where the student could benefit from feedback. Students should speak to their audience in an engaging manner: no reading from a prepared text, please.
- Final Research Paper: The longer analytical paper should be approximately 12-15 pages. In this assignment students are expected to do one of the following: a) apply the literature of one of the course topics to a particular country, region, or international event, b) provide an exhaustive and detailed critique of a particular course topic, going beyond the assigned readings to incorporate additional supplementary literature, c) explore in detail a particular debate between scholars in the academic literature relevant to gender and diversity. Due April 9.

All written papers for the course should have a clear focus and concentrate on developing an analytical argument supported with sufficient evidence. Papers should engage relevant academic literature in depth. Of the three papers assigned for the course, each must be on a different topic and each must discuss relevant assigned readings for the course. Papers should be typed, double-spaced and submitted directly to the professor in hard copy. All papers should include complete references and bibliography. Whenever you have drawn upon another author's idea, conceptualization or data, you are expected to acknowledge the source appropriately in a footnote or in-text citation. Direct quotations from sources should be used sparingly, when there is a clear purpose; and should respect fair-use conventions.

Plagiarism

The University Senate defines plagiarism as “presenting, whether intentional or not, the ideas, expression of ideas or work of others as one’s own.” This can include:

- reproducing or paraphrasing portions of someone else’s published or unpublished material, regardless of the source, and presenting these as one’s own without proper citation or reference to the original source;
- submitting a take-home examination, essay, laboratory report or other assignment written, in whole or in part, by someone else;
- using ideas or direct, verbatim quotations, or paraphrased material, concepts, or ideas without appropriate acknowledgment in any academic assignment;
- using another’s data or research findings;
- failing to acknowledge sources through the use of proper citations when using another’s works and/or failing to use quotation marks;
- handing in "substantially the same piece of work for academic credit more than once without prior written permission of the course instructor in which the submission occurs.

Plagiarism is a serious offence which cannot be resolved directly with the course’s instructor. The Associate Deans of the Faculty conduct a rigorous investigation, including an interview with the student, when an instructor suspects a piece of work has been plagiarized. Penalties are not trivial. They may include a mark of zero for the plagiarized work or a final grade of "F" for the course.

Student or professor materials created for this course (including presentations and posted notes, labs, case studies, assignments and exams) remain the intellectual property of the author(s). They are intended for personal use and may not be reproduced or redistributed without prior written consent of the author(s).
