Total revenue received from all sources outside Canada by Canadian Registered Charities in 2024

By Mark Blumberg (August 27, 2026)

The charity world is increasingly international in scope. Although we often focus on how Canadian charities conduct foreign activities abroad, there is another important story. In 2024, Canadian charities received approximately $4.3 billion from sources outside of Canada.

Although the number is larger than we would have thought it is not surprising. Canada is an excellent place to conduct charitable activities, both internally and internationally. With the Canadian dollar then being quite weak and Canada's talent pool offering strong value in purchasing power parity terms, we can expect that the amount will potentially increase as Canadian institutions can in some cases conduct charitable activities at lower costs than comparable U.S. institutions. We are also noting a dramatic increase in US charities establishing non-profits in Canada and moving funds out of the US because of the unstable political system and a worry that banks may bend to the whims of the administration.

From a fundraising perspective, fundraisers for Canadian charities should not only focus on the usual Canadian donors but also on foreign sources of revenue whether it be from governments, foundations, individual or corporations. The typical structure of a Canadian registered charity may not be optimized for foreign funding. We have assisted a number of charities in strategizing about foreign sources of revenue and putting systems in place to maximize their earning potential.

Below is a chart that contains a list of registered charities that received funds from sources outside of Canada in 2024. It is broken down into tax-receipted sources and non-tax receipted sources. We have also combined both tax receipted and non-tax receipted for "Combined Revenue from all sources outside of Canada". Finally, we have placed the registered charity's total revenue in the last column to provide a perspective on the size of foreign income compared to total income.

Limitations and Caveats

There are several cautions when dealing with information from the T3010. You can access the CRA Charities Listing database directly on the CRA. Blumbergs also maintains Canada's largest charity information portal at CharityData.ca, with up to 21 years of information on every Canadian registered charity. CharityData.ca is free, and the aim is to increase transparency in the Canadian charity sector. With CRA removing over 10 years' worth of information from the Charities Listing, CharityData.ca has far more years available. Currently, CRA provides only 5 years of historical information for each charity. There are many other differences between the Charities Listing and CharityData.ca, as we note in this article, CRA's Charities Listing vs. Blumbergs' CharityData.ca 2026.

1) Filings may be incomplete or not yet processed. The data is based on 2024 T3010 filings. Although charities are required to file within six months of their fiscal year end, some file late, don't file at all, or may not yet have been processed into CRA's database. CRA periodically revises and reprocesses filings, meaning figures pulled at different points in time may differ. This analysis reflects the database as processed by May 2026 and may not match figures pulled later.

2) Filings are self-reported and unverified. The T3010 is often completed by one person and is not independently verified by CRA when posted to the CRA Charities Listing.

3) Preparer expertise varies widely. Despite being a very important legal filing, the T3010 is often completed by volunteers with limited understanding of the Income Tax Act (Canada), limited language skills, limited access to accurate information on their charity and in a rush to complete the filing. Larger institutions typically use accountants or finance staff, which generally improves accuracy — though their filings are also more complex, so significant errors are common. One large university over a 10-year period indicated that it had approximately $2m in revenue and $2m in expenditures. It was supposed to be $2 billion, but apparently, the person completing the form relied on the financial statements for the numbers, which often remove the three zeros!

4) Paper filings introduce additional processing errors. The CRA does not allow fax filings of the T3010 anymore. Since 2019, T3010s should have been filed by registered charities using the CRA's My Business Account system (MyBA) because this makes the filing available more quickly, reduces errors and eliminates the possibility of CRA misplacing the charity's T3010, with a failure to file potentially resulting in revocation. As CRA notes "We strongly encourage you to file online. We are transitioning to a more accessible and digital-by-default environment, in line with the Government of Canada's Digital Standards. … This helps you avoid mail and processing delays, and can reduce your risk of making errors."

5) Some filings are deliberately deceptive. In some cases, those completing the T3010 are deliberately deceptive — for example, misclassifying fundraising expenses as charitable activities, or inflating the value of donated goods.

6) Always verify with due diligence. Don't rely on this information without checking directly with the charity and conducting appropriate due diligence. If you don't understand how to do due diligence on registered charities, then obtain assistance.

7) T3010 figures may not match financial statements. The T3010 is completed according to the CRA Guide, Completing the Registered Charity Information Return (T-4033), and may not conform to Generally Accepted Accounting Principles (GAAP); figures often differ from audited financial statements because this is a tax form, not a financial statement. Financial statements filed with CRA can be requested and may provide additional details which may be important and may not be disclosed on the T3010. Charities are not legally required to post financial statements publicly, but are encouraged to post at least the last 5 years on their websites to support donor transparency.

8) Some data fields are more error-prone than others. When one is reviewing total figures for all charities, some T3010 questions are more error-prone than others. Revenue figures, answered by nearly all charities, are relatively reliable. More subjective figures like administration expenditures are sometimes harder to determine. Lines like "Education and training for staff and volunteers" often have smaller numbers inserted, so one charity making a transpositional error, for example, on the line above dealing with total compensation, can distort the amount spent on education. In 2012, the top six organizations reporting political expenditures appear to have all been errors, inflating the total by roughly 1,000%. For 2013, reported political expenditures were $171 million; the actual figure was likely around $26 million. Unfortunately, CRA no longer asks about political activities.

9) The T3010 does not capture the full picture. The T3010 includes certain questions. Many important questions are not asked on the T3010. For example, the US Form 990 has far more questions than the T3010. Relying on the T3010 to make decisions on whether a charity is efficient or worthwhile to support is prone to failure. We have established a website at www.SmartGiving.ca that addresses some of the questions donors may want to ask before donating to charity.

10) Data reflects fiscal years, not calendar years. Charities have varying fiscal year-ends, so "2024" filings may cover periods ending as early as January 2024 and as late as December 2024. Comparisons across organizations should account for this, as economic conditions can vary significantly across a 12-month window. If you are trying to think about the impact of a particular event, keep that in mind.

11) Amalgamations, dissolutions, and name changes are not always reflected promptly. A charity that merges with another, winds down, or rebrands may continue to appear in the database under its old identity for some time, which can skew counts and financial totals.

12) Consolidated vs. entity-level reporting. Some large charities operate through multiple registered entities and file separately for each. Others consolidate activities under one registration. This inconsistency makes size comparisons across organizations unreliable without understanding each charity's actual structure.

13) Related party transactions are not disclosed. Charities may transfer funds to or receive funds from related organizations — affiliated non-profits, parent bodies, sister charities — without this relationship often being visible in the T3010. Revenue and expenditure figures can therefore be misleading when a charity is part of a larger network.
