COURSE DESCRIPTION/INSTRUCTORS STATEMENT

PSYC 1001 I – Introduction to Psychology will introduce you to the many ways that the scientific method has been applied to the study of mind and behavior. Topics will include psychology's emergence as a scientific discipline, research methodology, the biological basis of behavior, sensation and perception, consciousness, learning, memory, language, and thought.

This course will be fully online. Content will be accessible asynchronously, but the midterm and final will be administered on a specific day and time. Details will be given in the course outline on the first of the term.

EVALUATION

Online quizzes, two multiple choice tests, and participation in psychological research
