COURSE DESCRIPTION/INSTRUCTOR'S STATEMENT

Welcome to the fascinating world of Social Psychology! In our course, we will be exploring the way people think, feel, and behave (this is psychology) – but specifically, we will examine the way people's thoughts, emotions, and behaviours are influenced by the real or imagined presence of others – the social situation (this is social psychology). We will be addressing questions such as:

How and what do people think about one another?

How, and how much, do people influence one another?

What shapes the way we relate to one another?

The field of Social Psychology is vast, encompassing the study of a wide range of influences on behaviour. This second-year course is designed to explore many of the topics within Social Psychology – in order to give you a solid foundation for upper-year courses as well as get you thinking about thesis projects and a future career working in this area. For those of us who are not continuing in this area, the goal of the course is to help us develop practical and interesting ways of understanding human social behaviour – which at the very least, should give you some wicked insights into your friends, co-workers, significant others, and your children.

You don't need anything other than just the textbook (a printed book, or an eBook – either is fine).

You can purchase from the Carleton Bookstore.

But I'll also provide links in our course syllabus for purchasing direct from the publisher. You can rent 180-day access to the eBook, or 360-day access to Connect (the publisher's student site, which has the eBook within). The publisher can also send a print copy by mail.
