Course Description:
It is often said that secrecy is power. What does that mean? This course examines power, subjectivity, identity and politics from the perspective of secrecy. It surveys new perspectives on secrecy, along with allied concerns like conspiracy, silence, invisibility and revelation. There will be plenty of case studies and topics that will provide students a platform to develop their own research papers.