Course Description

Welcome to Working Toward Women's Equality in Nepal: A qualitative research project. In this course we will build on our understanding of qualitative research methods and feminist international development principles to undertake research exploring women's equality in Nepal. Our research question will be: "What would be a made-in-Nepal approach to women's equality?" This research question emerges from connections made with the Women's Foundation of Nepal (WFN) in Winter 2020 by students and the instructor in SOCI 3220C. Students will work with the instructor and the WFN on the research project design (including a literature review), data collection through interviews with five Nepalese women leaders, data analysis, and knowledge dissemination projects. The title of the research project is: Working toward women's equality: What is a made-in-Nepal approach?

This course will be conducted using cuLearn, video conferencing, Google Docs and other on-line technologies. The data collection will also be done remotely. Success in this course will depend on your active participation. This will be a fast-moving course based on experiential learning; your presence online and "in class" will be essential to the success of yourself and your team members.

Course Learning Objectives

By the end of the course, you will be able to:

1. Use sociological feminist concepts to describe, analyze and evaluate the intersection of approaches to development and to gender equality work in Nepal.
2. Understand your positioning as a student in Canada addressing an international development issue.
3. Understand and describe the gaps that can exist between stereotypical Western understandings of social issues overseas and the lived realities of people experiencing those issues.

4. Generate research findings that can support improvements in the interaction of Nepalese women working for women's equality with international actors interested in supporting them.
5. Engage productively with a team while contributing to a positive team experience.
6. Create a small research project using interviewing as the research method.
7. Communicate in an engaging and persuasive way with a non-academic audience.
8. Use reflection to improve your teamwork and social advocacy skills.

The Women's Foundation of Nepal

The Women's Foundation of Nepal is a national organization based in Kathmandu, Nepal with the resources and connections to provide an outstanding experiential learning opportunity for Carleton students. Their mission is to work toward a violence-free society by helping women and children in Nepal who are victims of violence, abuse and poverty. The organization has a powerful social analysis to support its work, seeing social justice emerging from integrated social supports and economic independence. The Women's Foundation runs a shelter, a kindergarten, a children's home and a fair-trade cooperative in the Kathmandu area. They provide training and micro-credits for women in rural areas, legal assistance for poor children, and work in many other ways to empower women and children to shape their future (<https://www.womenepal.org/>).

Readings

The readings for this course will be "front-end loaded" in the first 2 weeks as background for our research project. There are a total of 6 readings here and you will not be asked to do any further literature search beyond these readings although I have provided some further optional reading under the "For reference" section below. The readings will give you the necessary background to identify issues to be addressed in the research interviews and to give a context for the political and social situation in Nepal. You will find all of these materials on ARES within our course cuLearn.

Course Activities and Evaluation

The learning activities in this course are comprised of the steps to complete a qualitative research project. The students will undertake a combination of team and individual assignments. The teams will work together throughout the term culminating in a knowledge dissemination project. This is a blended course. You will do on-line learning activities, small group meetings and classes on video conference on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 6pm until 7:30pm.

The steps in the project are:

Step 1: Research design

Given the compressed timeline for the course, the research question has been composed and the method (interviewing) has been selected. A draft interview guide will be prepared. Students will review the guide and finetune it based on their learning from their readings.

Step 2: Data collection

Students will divide into teams to each take responsibility for conducting one interview. The project will include 5 to 7 interviews. All students are expected to attend all/most interviews. Each team will transcribe their interview for the use of the whole class in the data analysis phase.

Step 3: Data analysis

Each team will decide on the theme that they will focus on in their analysis project. A plan will be submitted. Individual students will do an analysis that fits within their team plan.

Step 4: Knowledge dissemination

Each team will create a knowledge dissemination plan. Teams can choose to write an article for an undergraduate journal, create a blog, write an article to submit to a CU forum, create a video or other vehicle for presenting their findings. The teams will complete and submit or post these projects.

Detailed assignment descriptions are posted on cuLearn and will be discussed in class.
