COURSE DESCRIPTION

The course will feature lectures and group discussions focused on student reflections, research and presentations about their learning in Sociology. Students will reflect personally on their interests that have arisen from their degree. They will also write about and discuss policy and theory, with an understanding that Sociology can inform public policy in many important ways. Finally, they will complete a research paper on a subject of their choosing, with literature chosen from the field. Themes of the course will include decolonizing sociology, settler colonialism, feminism and sociology. Concepts like identity, belonging, community, as well as an approach to understanding time and place in relation to decolonization and power structures, will be taken up.
